Postures (āsana) in Śaiva and Śākta tantras and āgamas

Compendium: list of texts, descriptions, dating and manuscripts, posture catalogue, extended quotations

Table of Contents

Introduction

1. What this compendium is

The compendium answers a single question: which postures (āsana) and posture-related terms occur in Śaiva and Śākta tantras and āgamas. It covers descriptions of postures, bare posture names, passing mentions, allusions, and terms that look like a posture but are none (pīṭha, karaṇa, seats, thrones, etc.). For every text where such passages have been found, it gives:

- what the text is and what it consists of;
- when it could have been composed and what researchers say about that;
- which manuscripts and editions are known;
- the posture passages themselves — verbatim, in extended context, with a precise translation.

The compendium is assembled from working files that used to be separate. They are merged here without abridgement. Only the presentation has changed: file names have been replaced by part numbers; in Part V catalogue line numbers have been replaced by catalogue sections; all abbreviations and internal codes in the compendium's own text have been spelled out; and every reference to an e-text has been turned into a link to the file itself on the internet (see § 6). The service list of working files and scripts at the end of the catalogue has also been removed.

2. What the compendium consists of

Part	Contents	Former file
I. List of texts	A table of 63 texts where postures have been found: source, passages, what	`spisok_tekstov.md`

	exactly was found, how it was checked
II. Descriptions of the texts	For each text: what it is, its framework, composition, contents, editions, postures	`opis/o1–o8.md`
III. Dating and manuscripts	Researchers' opinions on the date (verbatim quotations with translations), manuscripts, reasons for the gaps, summary table	`datirovka_rukopisi.md`
IV. Postures in tantras and āgamas	A catalogue of passages: Sanskrit, translation, type, analysis; verses with full translation (Devanagari, IAST, Cyrillic, word-by-word gloss); summaries, iconography, prohibitions, pitfalls	`tantra_asanas.md`
V. Extended quotations	For every passage with an e-text: the whole verse, two verses before and after, chapter, situation	`kontekst_citat.md`
Appendix A	Which sources are needed to close the gaps	`nuzhnye_istochniki.md`
Appendix B	All e-texts referred to: number, title, manuscript or edition the file was typed from, link to the file	— (compiled anew)
Appendix C	Abbreviations and symbols that remain inside verbatim quotations	— (compiled anew)

The compendium is issued in three forms:

- one master file — `svod_polnyj.md` and `svod_polnyj.docx`;
- the same text by parts in DOCX: `svod_1_spisok_i_opisaniya.docx` (introduction, parts I–II), `svod_2_datirovka.docx` (Part III), `svod_3_pozy.docx` (Part IV), `svod_4_kontekst.docx` (Part V and appendices A–C).

3. Sources

3.1. Primary sources (tantras, āgamas and paddhatis)

Source	What it is	How references look
Muktabodha	IAST e-texts of the Muktabodha Indological Research Institute library, typed from printed editions or from manuscripts. The edition or manuscript used is stated in the header of every file and is given in the description of each text (Part II)	"Muktabodha M00091, line 24726" — with a link to the file
GRETIL	Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages; the edition used for the file is stated in its header	"GRETIL, file sa_svacchandatantra, line 411" — with a link to the file; sometimes with a verse number

The working corpus contains 177 e-texts: 154 from Muktabodha and 23 from GRETIL; the compendium refers to 75 of them (list — Appendix B). Before release, all these files were checked byte-for-byte against the files on the Muktabodha and GRETIL sites. Scans of editions and scholarly works were also used (listed below and in Part III, § 0.2).

3.2. Scholarly literature

These are the main works on which the compendium relies. A few more works that passed through my hands are cited only where indicated, with full references: for example, Williams 2023 on Niśvāsa. The opinions of other scholars are given only via these authors, and this is always stated.

Part III, § 0.2 explains how page references to each work are given.

4. The rules by which the compendium was compiled

1. Nothing is invented. Every statement is backed by a source, and the source is stated next to it: a work and a page, a file and a line, or a colophon. Where there is no source, the gap is not filled with a guess: the reason for the gap is stated.
2. Quotations are verbatim. The Sanskrit is given exactly as in the e-text or edition, with all misprints; where necessary, [sic] is marked. Editors’ conjectures and typesetting marks (“p. 41)” for a printed page number, “[k: …]” for a variant reading, etc.) are kept. Omissions are marked with “…”.
3. Every non-English quotation is translated precisely (not paraphrased): “Translation: …”. Translations from Sanskrit are working and literal; an unsure reading is marked (?). Translations from Tamil are tentative.
4. My own observations are separated from the sources: they are marked “Note” or “in my view”.
5. Gaps are stated honestly. Where dating or description is missing, the reason is written out directly: for instance, “the AI did not search beyond the eight works listed in § 3.2”, “these works never mention the text at all (checked by scripted search)”, “researchers mention the text but give none of the required information”, or “the researcher refers to a work the AI does not have” (details — Part III, § 0.4). This only means that the AI found nothing or had no access, not that the information does not exist.

6. No internal codes. In the working files, the type of mention and the degree of verification were marked with letters; in the compendium they are everywhere spelled out in words. The columns of Part I state what was found in the text (a posture description, a list of names, a mention or an allusion, iconography — how a deity sits, a prohibition, karaṇa, a term that is not a posture) and how the quotation was checked (compared against the e-text, against a scan of an edition or a manuscript, Sanskrit known only from a quotation in a scholarly work, only the scholars' translation known, not checked). The ⚠ sign in Part IV marks information taken solely from scholarly literature. Abbreviations that remain inside verbatim quotations are explained in Appendix C.

5. How quotations and facts were checked (final verification)

Before the parts were merged, all five were re-checked.

1. Automatic quotation matching (`verify_all.py`). All Latin-script quotations were extracted from the compendium — Sanskrit IAST and the English and French quotations from scholarly works, 5,643 in all (including text names inside references, and appendices B and C). Each quotation was searched in the corpus of primary sources: all e-texts, OCR text of the scans of scholarly works, Muktabodha header files. Matching was done after stripping diacritics and spaces. 5,472 quotations were matched in full or almost in full.
2. Fuzzy matching of the remainder (`verify_fuzzy.py`). For quotations not matched exactly, the program looked for the nearest passage in the sources. Most mismatches are the result of OCR errors in the scans: the scan of Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 has no diacritics, small capitals were misread, lines were wrapped somewhere else. 128 fragments in 171 lines of the compendium are not automatically confirmed. I went through all of them by hand:
    - Sanskrit from printed editions and transcripts that do not exist as text — Mataṅga (Bhatt 1982), Niśvāsa (Kafle 2015, Devanagari), Kiraṇa 58 (transcripts of the French Institute of Pondicherry). These passages were checked by hand against page images. The Tamil Tirumantiram was checked by hand against the Wikisource text. While checking Kafle 2015, p. 181, it turned out that the edition reads baddhā, not baddhvā; the reading has been corrected;
    - fabricated quotations from the "dossier" that was sent in (Part IV, § 8 and § 15). They are quoted on purpose, as examples of what the sources do not contain, and are marked as such;
    - lists of posture names compiled by me — strings of words taken from different lines; not quotations;
    - colophons and short terms broken by a line wrap in the source or distorted by OCR (checked by hand);
    - one quotation from a GRETIL header (Toḍala) had been abridged without an ellipsis. It has been restored in full.

3. What was corrected in the final check:
    - in Part II, several quotations from Muktabodha headers and from Kafle 2015 had been given in normalised spelling or with an imprecise wording. They have been replaced by verbatim ones, in the spelling of the original, and file line numbers have been corrected;
    - in Part IV (§ 11, Niśvāsamukha 4.49–51), after checking against the printed page of Kafle's edition, baddhvā has been corrected to baddhā;
    - in Part III (no. 57) the colophons of the e-text of the Somaśambhupaddhati commentary itself have been added; they name Trilocanaśiva as its author.
4. The descriptions of texts nos. 47–63 (Part II) were written before the merge. They are based on the colophons and opening verses of the e-texts, on the Muktabodha headers and on the works listed in § 3.2. Their quotations went through the same automatic matching.

6. How to read the references

6.1. References to primary sources

Almost all Sanskrit quotations come from two open digital libraries: Muktabodha and GRETIL.

Example. In Part V, in the entry on Kulamuktikallolinī, the reference reads:

> Kulamuktikallolinī: Muktabodha e-text no. M00318 (Muktabodha Indological Research Institute), typed from the manuscript: NGMCP Manuscript No. 1-1675 Reel No. B 120/6; line numbers in that file: 11025–11036

What is what here:

- Muktabodha Indological Research Institute (Muktabodha for short) is an Indological research institute in the USA that runs an open digital library of Sanskrit texts. The texts are typed from printed editions or directly from manuscripts and published as plain text files.

- No. M00318 is the catalogue number of this e-text in the Muktabodha library. The number is assigned by the library itself; it is not a manuscript number. (Numbers like E000xx belong to the same library.)

- "typed from the manuscript: NGMCP Manuscript No. 1-1675 Reel No. B 120/6" — what the e-text was typed from; the information comes from the file's own header. NGMCP is the Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project; 1-1675 is the manuscript number in the National Archives of Nepal (Kathmandu), B 120/6 is its microfilm reel number. If the file was typed from a printed book, the header names the edition instead: editor, publisher, place, year.

- “line numbers in that file: 11025–11036” — yes, these are line numbers in the file, counted from its very first line (including the service header). They are not page, chapter or verse numbers. The chapter and verse, when known, are given separately in the compendium (e.g. “23.209cd–211a”).

- The link. The words “Muktabodha e-text no. M00318…” are a link opening the file itself, here https://muktalib7.com/DL_CATALOG_ROOT/MUKTABODHA-LIBRARY-IAST/kulamuktikallolinI-M00318-IAST.txt. To find the passage, open the file in any editor that shows line numbers (e.g. Notepad++, VS Code) and jump to line 11025 — or search (Ctrl+F) for the words of the quotation.

- Short form. The full reference is given at the first mention of a file in each section. Later in the same section the same file is cited briefly: “Muktabodha M00318, file lines 30761–30789” (also a link).

- In the working files such a reference looked even shorter — `kulamuktikallolinI-M00318 : 11025–11036` (file name, colon, line numbers). This notation no longer occurs in the compendium.

- References to GRETIL look like this: “Svacchandatantra: GRETIL e-text (University of Göttingen), file sa_svacchandatantra.txt, typed from the edition: …; line number in that file: 411”. GRETIL — Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages — is the digital library of Göttingen University (Germany). The link goes to the plain-text version of the file: `https://gretil.sub.uni-goettingen.de/gretil/corpustei/transformations/plaintext/sa_svacchandatantra.txt`; the number is a line of that file. A chapter and verse number from the edition is often given as well.

- Chapter and verse numbers (“7.290ab”, “4.14c–15d”) follow the edition or the file’s own colophons. The letters a–d are the quarters of a verse (pāda).

- If a quotation is not from an e-text, the edition and page are given (“Kafle 2015, p. 181”, “Bhatt 1982, p. 253”) or a transcript of the French Institute of Pondicherry with its page.

All e-texts referred to, with their numbers, titles, information on the manuscript or edition they were typed from, and file addresses, are listed in Appendix B. The files I worked with coincide byte-for-byte with the files at these addresses (checked in October 2026). If a site ever changes the line numbering (for instance, by posting a revised file), the passage can still easily be found by searching for the words of the quotation.

6.2. Cross-references inside the compendium

- “No. 12” — a text number in the list (Part I). It is the same in every part and in Appendix B.
- “§ 3.6” — a section of Part IV (the posture catalogue). References like “Part IV, § 3.6” point to the same place.

- In Part V the headings “1.1”, “1.2” etc. repeat the numbering of the Part IV sections to which the quotations belong. The “Where in the source” line of each entry gives the file and lines; in the extended text the number on the left is a file line number, and the lines of the quotation itself are marked with ▸.
- Scholarly works are cited by author’s name and year (full titles — § 3.2 and Part III, § 0.2), with page numbers.

6.3. Verses with translation (Part IV)

In Part IV some passages are followed by a “Verses with translation” block. It gives the full verses where a posture is described or mentioned, together with neighbouring verses without which the sense would be unclear. For every verse it provides:

- Devanagari. Generated automatically from the IAST by the usual rules (program `svod/translit.py`). This is not a copy of a manuscript and not a copy of a printed Devanagari edition. Words are separated by spaces in the same places as in the IAST, so a virāma sign sometimes stands at a word junction (e.g. छिनेद् ग्रन्थिम्).
- IAST. Verbatim from the linked e-text (Muktabodha or GRETIL), including misprints and editors’ marks. The verse number stands at the end.
- Cyrillic transliteration. (Retained from the Russian original as a service to readers of Slavic scripts.) Also generated automatically from the IAST, by the following scheme:
  - vowels: a — а, ā — ā, i — и, ī — ӣ, u — у, ū — ӯ, ṛ — ҏ, ṝ — ҏ̄, ḷ — ӆ, ḹ — ӆ̄, e — е, ai — аи, o — о, au — ау;
  - consonants: k — к, g — г, ṅ — ӈ, c — ч, j — дж, ñ — ӈ̃, ṭ — ҭ, ḍ — д̣, ṇ — ң, t — т, d — д, n — н, p — п, b — б, m — м, y — й, r — р, l — л, v — в, ś — ш́, ṣ — ш, s — с, h — х;
  - aspirates are written with “х”: kh — кх, gh — гх, ch — чх, th — тх, dh — дх, bh — бх;
  - ṃ (ṁ) — ӎ, ḥ — ҳ; the half-verse end / or | — ׀, the verse end // or || — ׀׀.
- Word-by-word gloss: the word (in Cyrillic; long compounds hyphenated) and its meaning in this passage, without grammar. Dubious places are marked “(?)” and explained in the notes.
- Literal translation: as close to word-for-word as possible. Square brackets contain words not present in the text.
- Smooth translation: the same sense in natural language. (In this English edition both translation tiers are given in English; the gloss words kept in Cyrillic belong to the Russian original’s notation.)
- Notes: variant readings between e-texts, file misprints, unclear places and how I understand them.

All these translations were made by me (the AI) from the e-texts. Unless explicitly stated, they were not cross-checked against published translations. For publication they must be reviewed by a Sanskritist. Blocks are added gradually: first passages with posture descriptions, then passages where a posture is only named.

7. Limitations

- I have no e-texts of Niśvāsa (except the Niśvāsamukha in Kafle's edition) and Parākhya. Jayadrathayāmala ṣaṭka 4 was obtained on 17 Oct 2026 (e-text M00681 of the very manuscript NAK 1-1468; see Part IV, § 10.3). The Raurava (no. 63) has not been read.
- Part of the scholarly literature is inaccessible to me; it is listed in Part III, section H, and in Appendix A.
- The translations of the Sanskrit passages are working ones. For publication they should be verified by a specialist.
- Rudrayāmala (Uttaratantra), at the customer's request, has no section of its own in the compendium and its verses are not translated. Only its references in the posture summary table (beginning of Part IV) and its mentions in other texts have been kept. Its e-text — Muktabodha M00074 — is not part of the working corpus; chapter and verse numbers in the references follow that file.
- The Haṭhayogapradīpikā, at the customer's request, is not translated as a standalone text (the customer already has a translation). But where its verses are quoted by other sources in our corpus (Vārāhītantra, chs. 26–27; the copy of the HP in manuscript M00501 together with the Ācārasāratantra), every posture mentioned is translated in the form in which it is quoted in those texts (manuscript readings, never corrected from the printed editions of the HP). Mentions and parallels in the notes are kept.

Part I. List of texts where postures were found (mentions and descriptions)

The "Passage type" column says what exactly was found in the text: a posture description, a name list, a mention or an allusion, iconography (how a deity sits), a prohibition, karaṇa (a specific body setting in yoga) or a term that is not a posture. The "How verified" column states what the quotation was compared with: an e-text (Muktabodha or GRETIL), a scan of an edition or manuscript, only a quotation in a scholarly work, or only the scholars' translation.

Part II. What these texts are: short descriptions (nos. 1–63)

For each text from the list, a short description is given here: what kind of text it is, which tradition it belongs to, what parts it consists of and what it is about. The numbering is the same as in Part I and Part III. Questions of dating and manuscripts are only mentioned here; they are discussed in detail in Part III.

How the descriptions are compiled

1. Nothing is taken "from memory". Every statement rests on one of two kinds of sources. The source is indicated in brackets.
    - Research that I worked with (full titles — in the introduction, § 3.2): Sanderson 2009 (The Śaiva Age), Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 (Goudriaan's survey part), Goodall 2004 (introduction to the Parākhyatantra), Kafle 2015 (Niśvāsamukha), Törzsök 1999 (Siddhayogeśvarīmata), Bang 2018 (Tantrasadbhāva), Bhatt 1982 (Mataṅga), Mallinson & Singleton 2017 (Roots of Yoga). In addition — the descriptions at the beginning of the Muktabodha and GRETIL electronic texts.
    - The text itself, i.e. the chapter colophons in the electronic text — the closing lines of the form iti … paṭalaḥ, where the chapter is named. They show what the text consists of. Chapter titles are taken from the colophons; the translation of the titles is mine. If the colophons in the electronic text are incomplete or corrupt, I say so.
2. My conclusions and observations are marked with the words "in my view" or "Note.".
3. When little is known about a text, I do not fill the gap with guesses but state the reason directly: the AI did not search beyond the listed works; the text is not mentioned in those works; the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; or the researcher refers to a work that the AI does not have.

4. The “Postures” line at the end of an entry briefly refers to the catalogue (Part IV), where the passages are given with quotations.

A. Early Śaiva tantras, Trika and Kaula

1. Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā — Nayasūtra

- What it is. The Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā is possibly the oldest surviving tantra of the Mantramārga, i.e. of tantric Śaivism (Kafle 2015, p. 6). In all lists of the Śaivasiddhānta canon it is counted among the eighteen “Rudra-tantras” (Kafle 2015, p. 6).
- What it consists of. The single old Nepalese manuscript contains five separate books: Niśvāsamukha, Mūlasūtra, Uttarasūtra, Nayasūtra and Guhyasūtra (Kafle 2015, p. 6). According to Goodall et al., the Mūlasūtra was composed first, then the Uttarasūtra, then the Nayasūtra; the Niśvāsamukha and Guhyasūtra are later (Goodall et al. 2015, quoted from Kafle 2015; in detail in `datirovka`, no. 1).
- The narrative frame according to Goudriaan. The narrator is the sage Mataṅga. In the Naimiṣa forest the sages learn of the initiation of Brahmā and Viṣṇu, and the question arises for them how initiation is possible outside the Vedic tradition. They turn to Nandin, Śiva’s attendant, and he transmits to them the Śaiva revelation in the form in which Śiva communicated it to his wife Pārvatī. According to Goudriaan, this is an intermediate stage: the thread of the narrative is still held by the ancient sages, but the occasion for the revelation is already the dialogue of Śiva and Devī that is characteristic of the Śākta tantras (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 34–35).
- The Nayasūtra is described by Goudriaan as a book slightly larger than the two previous ones but consisting of only four chapters (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 35).
    - The subject of the Nayasūtra is the nature of the nine tattvas and the letters corresponding to them, the chief of which is a (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 35).
    - Chapter 1 is devoted to the kinds of “fetters” (pāśa). Chapter 2 discusses the four divine qualities: dharma, jñāna, vairāgya, aiśvarya. Chapter 3 is on the five elements, chapter 4 — on the syllable oṃ (praṇava) (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 35).
- Yoga. According to the translations given by Mallinson and Singleton, chapter 4 of the Nayasūtra contains a yogic section (Roots of Yoga 3.3, Goodall’s translation):
    - a list of eight postures (4.14c–15d) and a second list (4.104–106);
    - prāṇāyāma and udghāta (4.109–118).
    - The yoga sections in the Niśvāsamukha (4.50 and following) and in the Nayasūtra (4.105 and following) are very similar (Kafle 2015, p. 35).

    - In Bang's table of parallels, Nayasūtra 4.107c–121 and 4.122–144 are matched with Tantrasadbhāva 28.18–31 and 28.37–60b (Bang 2018, p. 64).
- Letters in the body. Nayasūtra 1.29–30 states: without knowledge of the tattvas and of all the letters residing in the body there is no liberation. Some letters have the form of parts of the body, others — the form of the whole body (translation in Williams 2023, n. 17; see Part IV).
- Edition. The Mūla-, Uttara- and Nayasūtra have been published with translation in Goodall et al. 2015; the Guhyasūtra is unpublished (Kafle 2015, p. 6). The AI does not have the book itself (the needed work is not accessible to the AI), so the description of the Nayasūtra here is incomplete.
- Postures: Part IV, § 10 and § 11.

2. Niśvāsamukha

- What it is. The introductory book of the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā in four chapters. Its task is to show in what religious environment the Mantramārga arose (Kafle 2015, p. 7).
- Frame. The whole Niśvāsa corpus is framed as a dialogue between Śiva and Devī (Kafle 2015, p. 7).
    - The Niśvāsamukha introduces the scheme of the "five streams" (pañcasrotāḥ): Laukika ("mundane"), Vaidika ("Vedic"), Ādhyātmika ("relating to the soul", i.e. sāṃkhya and yoga), Atimārga (the "transcendent path" of the Pāśupatas) and Mantramārga (Kafle 2015, p. 7).
    - The first four streams are expounded in the Niśvāsamukha itself. The Mantramārga is the subject of the remaining four books of the corpus (Kafle 2015, p. 7).
- Proportions. The exposition is uneven (Kafle 2015, p. 7):
    - the mundane stream (in essence, lay Śaivism) is given the whole of the first three chapters, i.e. the greater part of the text;
    - the Vedic stream is expounded in fair detail;
    - sāṃkhya and yoga — briefly, especially sāṃkhya;
    - much space is given to the Pāśupata section.
- Value. The section on the Atimārga is one of the few testimonies about the Pāśupata tradition. It preserves Pāśupata material otherwise unknown (Kafle 2015, p. 7). Niśvāsamukha 4:70c–88 paraphrases the Pāśupatasūtra (Kafle 2015, p. 33).
- Contents according to Goudriaan. Goudriaan described the same part of the manuscript as "Laukikadharma" in four paṭalas (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 34–35):
    - ch. 1 — the merits of rites performed on certain days of the year, especially the bathing of the liṅga, and the fruits of gifting flowers;

    - ch. 2 — the same topic and kinds of gifts;
    - ch. 3 — tīrthas and worship on the appointed days;
    - ch. 4 — the Vedic dharma, then the "wisdom about the Self" (sāṃkhya and yoga), the Pāśupata vow and the "pure path" with a mystical cosmography.
- Connections. Chapters 5–9 of the Śivadharmasaṅgraha are closely connected with the Niśvāsamukha. Kafle publishes them in an appendix (Kafle 2015, p. 6) and considers the Śivadharmasaṅgraha a later text (Kafle 2015, p. 33).
- Edition. Kafle prepared the first critical edition with translation (Kafle 2015, p. 6).
- Postures: the list in 4.49cd–51 (in Kafle's edition), Part IV, § 11.

3. Svacchandatantra with Kṣemarāja's commentary (Uddyota)

- What it is. The principal scripture of the "Mantrapīṭha" (the corpus of mantras). It teaches the cult of Svacchandabhairava and his consort Aghoreśvarī (Sanderson 2009, pp. 45, 64). Along with the Mālinīvijaya and the Netra, it is one of the main authorities of the "āgamaśāstra" for Kashmiri Śaivas (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 31).
- What it consists of. 15 paṭalas (colophons GRETIL GRETIL file sa_svacchandatantra, M00091). Chapter titles are not given for all chapters in the colophons:
    - ch. 1 — "Revelation of the extraction of mantras" (mantroddhāraprakāśana);
    - ch. 4 — "Revelation of initiation and consecration" (dīkṣābhiṣekaprakāśana, per M00091);
    - ch. 5 — "Revelation of initiation through the tattvas" (tattvadīkṣāprakāśana);
    - ch. 6 — "Section on the five praṇavas" (pañcapraṇavādhikāra);
    - ch. 7 — "Section on time" (kālādhikāra, per M00091);
    - ch. 8 — "Section on the portions" (aṃśakādhikāra).
- Contents of individual chapters (from the references in my sources):
    - ch. 7 includes a yogic part: choice of place, worship of the teachers, and a list of seven postures with Kṣemarāja's definitions (7.290–291; Part V, § 1.1);
    - ch. 10 — cosmography, i.e. a description of the hells, netherworlds and worlds. Goodall, in a letter quoted by Kafle, calls it a model of Śaiva cosmology alongside Parākhya 5, Kiraṇa 8 and Guhyasūtra 4–7 (Kafle 2015, p. 39);
    - ch. 15 contains a secret dictionary. For example, in 15.5 it is said that the word "thread" means "sinew" (Sanderson 2009, p. 208).
- Caste. Sanderson cites the Svacchanda as an example of the rejection of caste distinctions in ritual. All who are initiated by this rite — brahmins, kṣatriyas, vaiśyas, śūdras and others — are of "equal nature", for they have been brought to fusion with Śiva's nature. "All samayins must sit in one row" (Sanderson 2009, p. 293, in Sanderson's translation).

- Place in history. According to Sanderson, the text was edited after the Niśvāsa corpus (Sanderson 2009, p. 50).
- Commentary. Kṣemarāja's commentary Uddyota is published in the KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar) together with the text in 7 volumes, 1921–1935 (Sanderson 2009, bibliogr.).
- Postures: 7.290–291, 4.365–367 (karaṇa) and others, Part IV, § 1.1.

4. Mālinīvijayottaratantra

- What it is. The scripture on which the Trika is based, i.e. the variant of Śākta Śaivism set out in Abhinavagupta's Tantrāloka (Sanderson 2009, p. 46). The text is connected with the Siddhayogeśvarīmata, which teaches the cult of the goddesses Parā, Parāparā and Aparā (Sanderson 2009, p. 46). According to Törzsök, the Mālinīvijayottaratantra itself states that it derives from the Siddhayogeśvarīmata (Törzsök 1999, p. vi).
- What it consists of. 23 adhikāra chapters (colophons M00160):
    - 1;
    - 2 — "on pervadedness" (vyāpti);
    - 3 — "extraction of mantras";
    - 4;
    - 5 — "the path of the worlds" (bhuvanādhvan);
    - 6 — "the path of the body" (dehamārga);
    - 7 — "the mudrās";
    - 8 — "the vows" (samaya);
    - 9 — "initiation by action" (kriyādīkṣā);
    - 10 — "consecration";
    - 11 — "initiation";
    - 12 — "the first dhāraṇā";
    - 13 — "conquest of the elements" (bhūtajaya);
    - 14 — "the dhāraṇā of the subtle elements" (tanmātra);
    - 15 — "the dhāraṇā of the organs" (akṣa);
    - 16 — "dhāraṇā";
    - 17;
    - 18 — "the highest knowledge" (paramavidyā);
    - 19 — "the circle of the kula" (kulacakra);
    - 20 — "the definition of all mantras";
    - 21 — "the attraction of the moon" (candrākṛṣṭi);
    - 22 — "the attraction of the sun" (sūryākṛṣṭi);

- Yoga. Hence roughly a third of the text (ch. 12–17) consists of yogic “dhāraṇās”, i.e. concentrations on the elements, the subtle elements and the organs (in my view, judging by the colophons). Chapter 17 speaks of the posture, udghāta and the measure mātrā (17.10–12; Part IV, § 1.2). Sanderson mentions Mālinīvijayottaratantra 17.25–33 among the passages describing the “exit from the body” (utkrānti) (Sanderson 2009, p. 185, n. 445).
- Mantras. Mālinīvijayottaratantra 3.42–50 contains the Aghorī Vidyāpīṭha mantra in the same form as Siddhayogeśvarīmata 3.23–39 and Tantrāloka 30 (Sanderson 2009, p. 148).
- In other texts. The Jayadrathayāmala places the “Ṣaḍardha” (= Mālinīvijayottaratantra) first among the three tantras of the Trika in its hierarchy of scriptures (Sanderson 2009, p. 47).
- Editions. Muktabodha M00160 is a photograph of KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar) 37. GRETIL contains chapters 1–4, 7, 11–17 from Vasudeva’s 2004 critical edition (`datirovka`, no. 4).
- Postures: 7.15, 12.7, 16.48, 17.10–12 and others, Part IV, § 1.2.

5. Kubjikāmatatantra

- What it is. The main text of the cult of the goddess Kubjikā, the “Western tradition” (Paścimāmnāya). The sect existed no later than the 11th century, and very probably earlier. Manuscripts of its texts usually come from Nepal (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 52). The main version is about 3,500 ślokas. In its colophons the text calls itself Kulālikāmnāya, the “tradition of the potters” (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 52; GRETIL: colophons iti kulālikāmnāye śrīkubjikāmate).
- Language. Goudriaan calls the language irregular and the style “uncultivated”. The manuscript tradition is full of variants (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 52–53).
- What it consists of. 25 paṭalas (GRETIL colophons). Contents according to Goudriaan (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 53–54):
    - ch. 1–2 and the beginning of ch. 3 — the legend of the origin of Mālinī. Mālinī is the secret “female” order of the letters of the alphabet and the “womb” of mantras; her birth is understood as the recreation of Devī from Śiva’s body. Śiva manifests himself as the ordinary “male” order of letters (śabdarāśi), and a dispute about precedence arises between them. Mālinī in anger returns the letters to Śiva and falls asleep in her eternal coiled form (amṛtakuṇḍalī) (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 53, from Kubjikāmatatantra 1.70–77);
    - ch. 2 — Mālinī manifests herself as Kubjikā and establishes her cult in the pīṭhas all over India;
    - ch. 3 — on the qualities of the guru;
    - further — the sect’s mantra technique: gahvaramālinī, the combination of Mālinī and śabdarāśi in the umāmaheśvaracakra, rules of japa;
    - ch. 6 — the main mudrās;

    - from ch. 7 — the mantras and manifestations of Kubjikā: the main 32-syllable mantra with six “limbs” and their dūtī deities;
    - ch. 8 — the meditative image of Svacchandā, the deity of the third “limb” (śikhā) of the mantra (Kubjikāmatatantra 8.17 and following, translation in Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 54);
    - ch. 11–14 — the six inner cakras;
    - ch. 14–19 — the four planes of meditation (piṇḍa, pada, rūpa, rūpātīta), identified with the four main pīṭhas: Oḍḍiyāna, Jālandhara, Pūrṇagiri, Kāmarūpa;
    - ch. 20–22 — the “mātṛkās” and the 24 pīṭhas in the adept’s body;
    - ch. 23–25 — the nature of time, the yogic “exit” (utkrānti), the secret deities of the alphabet, the eight kṣetras, the secret meaning of the goddess’s attributes.
- What is scarce. According to Goudriaan, worship and initiation, which ought to have been central for the sect, are treated only briefly (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 54).
- Expanded recension. The Ṣaṭsāhasrasaṃhitā, the “six-thousand version”, follows the order of the Kubjikāmatatantra but expands what was left unsaid (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 54–55).
- Edition. Goudriaan & Schoterman (GRETIL).
- Postures: Part IV, § 1.3.

6. Netratantra (Amṛteśa) with Kṣemarāja’s commentary

- What it is. A tantra centred on Śiva as the “Lord of the elixir of immortality”, the “Conqueror of death” (Mṛtyuñjaya). Under the name Amṛteśatantra it is the same text (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 33). One of the three main authorities of Kashmiri Śaivas, together with the Svacchanda and the Mālinīvijaya (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 31). In the Jayadrathayāmala’s list it figures as Amṛteśvarabhairava among the Bhairava-tantras (Sanderson 2009, p. 48).
- What it consists of. 22 adhikāra chapters (colophons M00038). Titles survive in the colophons only for a few:
    - 3 — “worship and the rest” (yajanādi);
    - 5 — “the consecration rite”;
    - 6 — “the sādhana rite”;
    - 7 — “the definition of subtle meditation” (sūkṣmadhyāna).
- Individual chapters according to my sources:
    - ch. 11 (11.1–27) — the cult of Tumburu and the four sisters (Sanderson 2009, p. 51);
    - ch. 20 — how the yoginīs extract the vital juices of their victims in order to offer them to Mahābhairava and thereby free the victims (Sanderson 2009, p. 184);

    - ch. 22 (22.26–34) is indicated by Sanderson as a parallel in a note on the *kalā*s of mantras (Sanderson 2009, p. 64, n. 70).
- The royal cult. According to Sanderson, the Netra shows the existence of a special class of Śaiva priests. They operate in almost all the areas traditionally reserved for the brahmin royal chaplain: worship of deities by day, the royal festivals Indrotsava and Mahānavamī, protective rites for the royal family, healing, repelling supernatural attacks (Sanderson 2009, p. 273).
- Yoga. According to B. Bäumer's article (read at the beginning of this work, web version): ch. 7 expounds a "subtle" yoga, ch. 8 reinterprets the eight-limbed yoga.
- What is missing. On the aim, date and origin of the text — the article Sanderson 2005b, which the AI does not have (Sanderson 2009, p. 273, n. 650; the needed work is not accessible to the AI).
- Edition. KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar) 46 and 59, 1926 and 1939 (Sanderson 2009, bibliogr.).
- Postures: Part IV, § 1.4.

7. Mṛgendra(tantra / āgama) with the vṛtti by Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha

- What it is. A scripture of the Śaivasiddhānta. According to Goodall, together with the Mataṅga and the Parākhya it belongs to those early siddhāntas which treat theological and philosophical questions in detail, are thematically tightly constructed and are written partly in the style of philosophical kārikā (Goodall 2004, p. xlviii). Goodall calls the Mṛgendravidyāpāda "also relatively late" (Goodall 2004, p. xliii), and the Mataṅga and the Mṛgendra "later, even more śāstric" than the Parākhya and the Kiraṇa (Goodall 2004, p. xliv).
- Narrative frame. The sages led by Bharadvāja practise asceticism in Nārāyaṇa's hermitage. Indra comes to them in the guise of an ascetic and asks why they do not follow the Vedic injunction (Mṛgendratantra 1.1.1–4, GRETIL).
- What it consists of. The text itself announces a division into four pāda parts. After the teaching on the "three realities" (vastutraya) the caryā-, yoga- and kriyāpāda follow (Mṛgendratantra 1.2.8, GRETIL).
    - The Vidyāpāda ("part of knowledge") is divided in GRETIL into 13 sections (prakaraṇa). Titles in M00037: refutation of other teachings on liberation, examination of the marks of the Lord (pati), the "five acts" of Śiva (pañcakṛtya), inquiry into karma, and others.
- Commentary. The vṛtti of Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha, whom Goodall dates to ca. 925–975 (Goodall 2004, p. lviii).
- Yoga. Yogapāda 17–19 describes the yogin who sits "in a good posture" (svāsanastha) facing north, keeps his neck, head and chest straight, and covers his scrotum with his heels. Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha explains: "one's own posture" is a posture such as the padma, svastika or ardhacandra, the marks of which are set out "in other āgamas" (M00037; Part IV, § 1.5). In GRETIL parts 3 and 4 are the Caryā- and Yogapāda (references MrgT_3, MrgT_4).

- Editions. KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar) 50 (Bombay 1930) and N. R. Bhatt's edition (GRETIL); M00037 follows the Devakottai series, vol. 12 (Muktabodha).
- Postures: Yogapāda 17–19, Part IV, § 1.5.

8. Bṛhatkālottara

- What it is. One of the versions of the Kālottara, called "Great" (Bṛhad-) for its size; in the colophons it calls itself Mahātantra (Muktabodha E00012). Sanderson includes the Bṛhatkālottara in the list of siddhānta scriptures that appeared after the Niśvāsa (Sanderson 2009, p. 45).
- What it consists of. About ninety paṭala chapters (colophons E00012, iti kālottare mahātantre …). It is an extensive ritual manual. The colophons reveal large blocks (translation of titles mine):
    - mantras: the extraction of a series of mantras (niṣkala, śūnya, kalāḍhya, kṣapaṇa, kaṇṭhoṣṭha and others);
    - daily practice: sandhyā, ablutions (with water and with ash), daily worship, construction of the kuṇḍa, mudrās;
    - initiation: preparation (adhivāsa), the general fire offerings, the "all the paths" (sarvādhvan), dīkṣā, the samaya vows, the worship of Caṇḍā, the consecrations of the ācārya and other grades of initiates;
    - tradition and doctrine: the "sections of Śiva", the origin of the tantras and their interpretation;
    - worship of deities: Gaṇapati, Vāgīśvarī;
    - protection and pacification: weapon-mantras (astra, the pāśupatāstra), pacification rites (śānti, including the "Aghorakalpa", the Rudraśānti), the planets;
    - life of the initiates: the āśramas, gocara, the testing of the guru, the signs of the time (aṃśakakāla), maṇḍalas, the funeral (antyeṣṭi), śrāddha;
    - temple and images: liṅga and images, the faces of the Mothers and of Bhairava, the pedestal (pīṭha), the site rite (vāstuyāga), the signs of the temple, consecration, restoration of the dilapidated, the signs of the bull Nandin;
    - yoga (yogapaṭala).
- Connections with other texts.
    - Goodall allows that the Bṛhatkālottara knew a different Parākhya from the one that has come down to us. He relies on its chapter "the interpretation of the origin of the tantras", where the Parākhya is said to be "twofold" (Goodall 2004, p. xxxix).
    - In Bang's table of parallels Tantrasadbhāva 25.14–68 is matched with the Bṛhatkālottara (manuscript NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms) A 43-1) / Ṣaṭsahasrakālottara (Bang 2018, p. 64).

- What is missing. There is no consolidated description of this version's content in my works (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources). The list above is from the colophons only.
- Postures: the āsanāṣṭaka, vīrāsana as tapas and others, Part IV, § 1.6.

9. Ṣaṭsāhasrakālottara

- What it is. The "Kālottara in six thousand [ślokas]", one of several recensions of the Kālottaratantra. Goudriaan writes that the Kālottara is an "undoubtedly ancient text" that was often quoted; it has several recensions, and two of them, in 1,300 and 700 ślokas, survive in Nepalese manuscripts (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 38). He says nothing about the Ṣaṭsāhasra recension.
- What others write about it. Sanderson and Goodall list other recensions of the Kālottara and do not discuss this one separately (Sanderson 2009, p. 295; Goodall 2004, p. xcvi, n. 151). There is no consolidated description of its content in my sources (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- What it consists of (from the electronic text). The electronic text M00249 was made from the IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) transcript T0767 (Muktabodha). It begins without the beginning, in the middle of a maṇḍala description, with lacunae. The colophons are few (translation mine):
    - "worship of Gaṇapati";
    - "pacification of Rudra" (rudraśānti);
    - "the āśramas";
    - ch. 14 — "gocara";
    - ch. 15 — "rules of conduct of an ācārya bound to an āśrama" (samayācāra);
    - ch. 16 — "testing of the guru" (guruvicāra);
    - ch. 17 — "signs of the 'portions'" (aṃśakatā-lakṣaṇa).
- Note. The sequence Gaṇapati → pacification → āśramas → gocara → testing of the guru → "portions" coincides with the order of chapters in the Bṛhatkālottara (no. 8). In my view this confirms that both versions go back to the same Kālottara "framework". This is my observation from the colophons, not a conclusion of researchers.
- Note. Further on, the colophons of M00249 name other texts: bhīmakāraṇe pratiṣṭhā taṃtre (before the "vow of Vināyaka", Muktabodha e-text no. M00249, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0767; line number in that file: 2300), the Kāraṇa, the Kāmika, "vijayākhya mahātaṃtre śivarātri vidhiḥ" ("in the great tantra Vijayākhya — the Śivarātri rite", Muktabodha M00249, file line 5830). Apparently this manuscript or transcript is an anthology into which extracts from other āgamas have been written. This is a conclusion from the colophons; I could not verify it against a description of the manuscript (the AI did not search beyond its sources).

- Connections. In Bang's table of parallels Tantrasadbhāva 25.14–68 is matched with the Bṛhatkālottara / Ṣaṭsahasrakālottara (T0767) (Bang 2018, p. 64).
- Postures: vīrāsana at night as asceticism (parallel to the Bṛhatkālottara); the meditative image of Dakṣiṇāmūrti with the yogapaṭṭa. See Part IV, § 1.6 and the iconography table.

10. Sarvajñānottara

- What it is. A scripture of the Śaivasiddhānta. Goudriaan calls it "without doubt one of the earliest surviving Śaiva tantras". The Nepalese manuscript is very old but incomplete (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 38 and n. 27). Sanderson includes it in the list of scriptures that appeared after the Niśvāsa (Sanderson 2009, p. 45).
- Doctrine. Among the early siddhāntas the Sarvajñānottara stands apart: it defends, rather than refutes, the non-dual position (Goodall 2004, p. lvi, n. 93). Like most early siddhāntas it does not treat theological questions in as much detail as the Mataṅga, Mṛgendra and Parākhya (Goodall 2004, p. xlviii).
- Frame. The teaching is addressed to Ṣaṇmukha, i.e. Skanda (śṛṇu ṣaṇmukha, M00327, beginning of the Yogapāda).
- What it consists of. The colophons of M00327 (translation mine) divide the text into three parts.
    - Yogapāda ("part on yoga"). It contains the section "direct realization of one's own Self" (svātmasākṣātkāra).
    - Jñānapāda ("part on knowledge"): "the elements, the soul and the rest" (bhūtātmādi); ends with the colophon jñānapādaḥ samāptaḥ.
    - Kriyāpāda ("part on action"), the largest:
        - the origin of mantras and tantras; the extraction of the "gross" letter mantras and of the prāsāda mantra; paramīkaraṇa;
        - worship, the fire rite, taking of earth;
        - the five products of the cow and other "limbs" of initiation;
        - the "paths" (adhvan); initiation; initiation by kalās, tattvas and the five tattvas; the initiation of the dead (mṛtakadīkṣā);
        - the funeral (antyeṣṭi);
        - the "extraction of the liṅga" and the rest; consecration and brief consecration;
        - japa; the "vow of Śiva" (śivavrata);
        - installation of an image (pratiṣṭhā); restoration of the dilapidated; images;

        - “siddhis and the sādhaka”; begging for alms;
        - “ablution with water” and “ablution with ash”.
- Initiation. According to Bhatt, the Sarvajñānottara describes (kriyāpāda, ch. 9) an initiation with the five brahma-mantras, six aṅga-mantras and the formulas of Śiva, Gāyatrī and kṣurikāstra, and in ch. 10 — an initiation through the five tattvas (Bhatt 1982, p. xx).
- Funeral. Sanderson sees here an intermediate stage of development. The Sarvajñānottara, like the Svāyambhuvasūtrasaṃgraha, teaches the cremation rite for an initiate but does not mention śrāddha (Sanderson 2009, p. 303).
- Editions and manuscripts. Goodall mentions: the Tanjore, Devakottai and Adyar editions and a Nepalese manuscript (Goodall 2004, p. lvi, n. 93). Details — `datirovka`, no. 10.
- Postures: the list of postures in the Yogapāda (per Kafle); baddhapadmāsana and svastika in japa. See Part IV, § 1.7 and § 11.3.

11. Niśvāsakārikā

- What it is. A Śaiva text entitled “Niśvāsa” that is absent from the Nepalese manuscript of the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā. It survives separately, in three South Indian IFP transcripts (T.17, T.127, T.150) (Kafle 2015, p. 6, n. 1).
- Relation to the Niśvāsa. Guhyasūtra 18.15 refers to a work called “Kārikā”, presumably the Niśvāsakārikā (Kafle 2015, p. 6, n. 1). According to Goodall (2015, as reported by Bang), the Niśvāsakārikā is younger than the old Niśvāsa corpus and may belong to the time of the closing lines of the Guhyasūtra, i.e. to the 7th century (Bang 2018, p. 82).
    - Goudriaan, who knew a Niśvāsakārikā manuscript in Madras, held that it is a different text, not the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 34, n. 9).
- Frame. A dialogue: Devī asks, Śiva answers (devy uvāca, M00251).
- What it consists of. The electronic text M00251 (transcript T0017A, up to p. 635) begins with the colophon of ch. 11 and contains chapters 12 to 53 (Muktabodha; colophons). Many chapters are assigned to the section of “knowledge” (jñānakāṇḍa). Named topics (translation mine):
    - “the lotus of the heart” (hṛtpadma);
    - the extraction of mantras and the eternity of mantras;
    - kinds of errors in knowledge (jñānavibhrama);
    - the saṃskāra rites and the “mental grace” (mānasānugraha);
    - “grace through speech” and “the lotus of the mouth”;
    - “the endless power” (anantaśakti, ch. 38);
    - the disposition of the image (mūrtivinyāsa);
    - the marks of knowledge and the knowable in the siddhānta;

    - the superimposition of the bodies of all the gods (nyāsa).
- The beginning of the electronic text is the teaching on the syllable oṃ: a — Brahmā, u — Viṣṇu, m — Rudra, bindu — Īśvara, nāda — Śiva (M00251, stanzas 3–5).
- Continuation. The rest of the manuscript is in the transcript T0017B. Its concluding part is the Dīkṣottara (no. 12) (Muktabodha M00279, M00280).
- Connections. Bang finds passages from the Niśvāsakārikā (especially ch. 32) in chapters 1 and 9 of the Tantrasadbhāva, and Tantrasadbhāva 27.3ab is a parallel to the Niśvāsakārikā. From these borrowings she dates the Tantrasadbhāva (Bang 2018, pp. 64, 82).
- Postures: criticism of gazing at the tip of the nose in ch. 16, 50, 52; sukhāsīna; padmāsana in visualization. See Part IV, § 1.8.

12. Dīkṣottara

- What it is. A text transmitted as the last part of the Niśvāsakārikā. In the colophons: iti niśvāsakārikāyāṃ dīkṣottare … paṭalaḥ (M00279). Muktabodha calls it the "fifth section" of the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā and an "important early āgama of the Śaivasiddhānta".
- Researchers' views. Bang and Sanderson see it differently:
    - according to Bang, the 19 chapters of the Dīkṣottara may have been an addition appended to the Niśvāsakārikā (Bang 2018, p. 82);
    - according to Sanderson, the funeral rites are absent from the early Niśvāsa corpus and appear only in the Dīkṣottara, "added to this corpus later" (Sanderson 2009, p. 302, n. 717).
    - Kafle mentions that the Niśvāsakārikā contains the Dīkṣottara "as part of itself" — apparently a separate Śaiva work (Kafle 2015, p. 6, n. 1, referring to Goodall et al. 2015: 23–26).
- What it consists of. 19 paṭalas (colophons M00279; the electronic text was made from the IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) transcript T0017B, p. 795 to the end). Titled colophons (translation mine):
    - "the descent of the tantra" (tantrāvatāra), i.e. how the teaching was transmitted;
    - "the yoga of bindu and nāda";
    - "the section on sacrifice" (yāga);
    - "sacrifice to Śiva";
    - "the examination of sakala" (of Śiva "with parts");
    - preparation (adhivāsana);
    - the rule about the food of the deities and the tattvas;
    - "the circle of time" (kālacakra).
- Yoga. Judging by the colophons ("the yoga of bindu and nāda", "the circle of time") and by the passage on "deceiving death" (stanza 44 of one of the chapters after the kālacakraprakaraṇa, Dīkṣottara: Muktabodha e-text no. M00279, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP Transcript T0017B from page 795 to end; line number in that file: 5335), the text contains yogic sections. This is my conclusion (in my view); there is no description of the Dīkṣottara's content in my sources (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information).

- Postures: yogāsane sthitaḥ in the section on deceiving death, Part IV, § 1.9.

13. Kiraṇa(tantra) — ch. 58 (the first chapter of the Yogapāda)

- What it is. One of the few surviving siddhāntas that are demonstrably early. Goodall puts it on a "tiny list" together with the Niśvāsa, Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha, Svāyambhuvasūtrasaṃgraha and Pārameśvara (Goodall 2004, p. xxxvii). A dated Nepalese palm-leaf manuscript of 924 exists (Sanderson 2009, bibliogr.).
- Frame. Garuḍa (Tarkṣya) sees Hara on the summit of Kailāsa, praises him and asks how people are liberated (Kiraṇatantra 1.1–10, GRETIL). Goodall notes that Garuḍa's questions, like those in the Mataṅga and the Pratoda, insistently seek doubts and contradictions in the teaching (Goodall 2004, p. xliv).
- Self-description. Śiva calls the "great tantra by the name Kiraṇa" a teaching of the knowledge of the "beast, the fetters and the Lord" (paśu-pāśa-pati) and of "reasoning", furnished with ritual (kriyā) and rules of conduct (caryā) and bestowing yoga and powers (Kiraṇatantra 1.12–13, GRETIL).
- Parts. Rāmakaṇṭha in his commentary speaks of the "four parts" (pādacatuṣṭaya) of the text (vṛtti on 1.11). The pupil's questions set six subjects (ṣaṭpadārtha), beginning with the "beast" (vṛtti on 1.14).
- What it consists of. According to the IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) transcripts — 64 chapters (T0998, colophon at the end: yogapādaḥ samāptaḥ; Part IV, § 13):
    - ch. 1–12 are assigned by Rāmakaṇṭha to the Vidyāpāda (Goodall 2004, p. xcvii);
    - the Caryāpāda ends at ch. 57 (T0998, p. 183);
    - the Yogapāda is ch. 58–64. Per the table of contents of T0746: 58 — "the rule of practice in yoga", 59 — "the signs of time and of the exit [from the body]", 60 — the funeral, 61 — ekoddiṣṭa (memorial rite, including the "Śaiva śrāddha"), 62 — "extraction of the liṅga", 63 — mātṛkānyāsa.
- Individual chapters according to research:
    - ch. 8 — cosmology (Goodall in the letter quoted by Kafle; Kafle 2015, p. 39);
    - ch. 59 — the "exit from the body" (utkrānti) (Sanderson 2009, p. 185, n. 445);
    - Sanderson notes that the category of initiates freed from heavy obligations "appears later" — in the Kiraṇa, Pārameśvara and Svacchanda. The king was also counted in this category (Sanderson 2009, p. 254 and n. 591).
- Yoga (ch. 58). Garuḍa asks about the practice of yoga. The answer (Part IV, § 13):

    - yoga is six-limbed: pratyāhāra, dhyāna, prāṇāyāma, dhāraṇā, āsana, samādhi;
    - eight postures are listed and described: svastika, padma, ardhacandra, vīra, yogapaṭṭa, prasārita, paryaṅka, yathāsaṃstha;
    - then come the hand positions, pratyāhāra, prāṇāyāma and dhāraṇā.
- Commentary and editions. The vṛtti of Bhaṭṭa Rāmakaṇṭha (II); ch. 1–6 were published by Goodall (1998; GRETIL). The Mysore codex contains only ch. 1–11 and 58–59. The copyist, according to Goodall, preserved doctrine and yoga and omitted ritual (Goodall 2004, p. xcvii).
- What is missing. An analysis of the whole text is H. Brunner's article "Analyse du Kiraṇāgama" (Journal Asiatique 253, 1965, pp. 309–328), to which Goudriaan refers (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 46, n. 60a). The AI does not have it (the needed work is not accessible to the AI).

14. Mataṅgapārameśvara(āgama), Yogapāda

- What it is. A scripture of the Śaivasiddhānta, by its own definition an upāgama. Its tradition considers itself one of the "redactions" of the scripture Pārameśvara (Goodall 2004, p. liii; Bhatt 1982, p. v). Together with the Mṛgendra, Goodall calls it "later, even more śāstric" than the Kiraṇa and the Parākhya (Goodall 2004, p. xliv). The Mataṅga, Mṛgendra and Parākhya treat philosophical questions in detail and are written partly in the kārikā style (Goodall 2004, p. xlviii).
- Frame. The sage Mataṅga asks, Parameśvara answers. At the end Mataṅga asks what to do now that the "nectar of the āgamas" has been uttered, and the Lord bids him teach the treatise to worthy disciples (Bhatt 1982, p. lxxvi).
- What it consists of. Four parts (pāda): Vidyā-, Kriyā-, Yoga- and Caryāpāda.
    - According to the text itself (Vidyāpāda 2.9–13), 3,500 verses in total: 1,500 in the Vidyāpāda, 1,000 in the Kriyāpāda, 500 each in the Yoga- and Caryāpāda.
    - In the text known to Bhatt there are 1,537, 1,001½, 454½ and 484½ verses, 3,477½ in total — "remarkably close" to the stated number (Bhatt 1982, p. v).
    - The Kriyāpāda counts 15 chapters (Bhatt 1982, p. v).
- Individual chapters:
    - Vidyāpāda 6.63c–64b paraphrases Sāṅkhyakārikā 62, and there is a hint of Dignāga's definition of perception (Goodall 2004, p. xlix, n. 68);
    - Kriyāpāda 9 — the initiation "on nine bases of tattvas"; the chapter is incomplete in the sole manuscript (Bhatt 1982, p. xx);
    - Caryāpāda 9 — the "exit from the body" (utkrānti) (Sanderson 2009, p. 185, n. 445);
    - the end of the Caryāpāda: the layout of the house (kitchen, sacrificial pavilion, cowshed, etc.), rules of sleep, midnight worship with an ash ablution. Then — the burial of ascetics (yatin): they are buried in the ground. And finally, the division of the deceased teacher's property and the succession of the senior disciple (Bhatt 1982, p. lxxvi).

- Yoga. Yogapāda 2.10–29 describes four postures (2.12cd–22b, including kamala) and karaṇa, i.e. the "devices" for giving the body form (2.22c–29) (checked against the scans of Bhatt 1982, pp. 253–256; Part IV, § 12). Bhatt's edition is supplied with drawings of mudrās, diagrams, araṇi and yoga postures (Bhatt 1982, p. lxxvii).
- Commentary. Bhaṭṭa Rāmakaṇṭha's (II) commentary survives only for the Vidyāpāda and part of the Kriyāpāda (up to 11.13), although Rāmakaṇṭha himself says he commented on all four parts (Bhatt 1982, p. v).
- Editions. Bhatt 1977 (Vidyāpāda) and 1982 (the other three parts).

15. Parākhya(tantra)

- What it is. A siddhānta tantra, probably one of the latest among the demonstrably early ones, i.e. before the 10th century (Goodall 2004, pp. xliv, lviii). Its other name is Saurabheya (Goodall 2004, pp. xxxix–xl).
- Frame. The teacher is Prakāśa, i.e. the Sun, and the questioner is Pratoda, identified with the sage Vasiṣṭha. Sanderson proposes to understand "Saurabheya" as "taught to Saurabha", i.e. to Vasiṣṭha, who is connected with the cow Surabhi (Goodall 2004, p. xl).
- Character. Like the Mṛgendra and the Mataṅga, and unlike most early siddhāntas, the Parākhya treats theological and philosophical problems in detail, is thematically tightly constructed and is written partly in the style of philosophical kārikā (Goodall 2004, p. xlviii). It attempts to set out and defend a consistent picture of the world (Goodall 2004, p. xliv).
- What it consists of. One incomplete manuscript survives: paṭalas 1–6 and 14–15 (Goodall 2004, p. xxxv). The copyist omitted chapters 7–13. From 6.81 it is clear that a ritual section followed chapter 6. The numerous ritual quotations in other authors, not found in the manuscript, may come from those chapters (Goodall 2004, p. xli).
- Individual chapters:
    - ch. 2–3 — polemics. For example, in 3.38 Pratoda objects by repeating Kumārila's formulation. Most of ch. 3 (3.23 and following) discusses whether the "uncreatedness" of the Veda can be proved by any of the six means of knowledge — an unusual topic for a Śaiva tantra (Goodall 2004, pp. l–li);
    - ch. 5 — the chapter on the worlds (bhuvanapaṭala). Its order of tattvas coincides with that of the Tattvaprakāśa, except for the omission of śakti. Thus the Parākhya is the closest of all early tantras to the canonical siddhānta of the exegetes (Goodall 2004, pp. xliii–xliv). For Kafle it is likewise a model of Śaiva cosmology (Kafle 2015, p. 39);
    - ch. 6 — an echo of Dharmakīrti in 6.49cd (Goodall 2004, p. xlix);

    - ch. 14 — yoga (in the edition: Sanskrit pp. 109–122, translation pp. 347–386).
- Postures: Parākhya 14.5 — padma, svastika, daṇḍa, ardhacandra; the definition of ardhacandra in 14.6c–7b (per Kafle). See Part IV, § 11.3.
- Edition. Goodall 2004 (critical edition, translation, introduction).

16. Vijñānabhairava

- What it is. A short text (162 verses in GRETIL) in the form of a dialogue between Devī and Bhairava. It calls itself the quintessence of the Rudrayāmala: “the essence of the Rudrayāmalatantra has now been set out” (verse 161, GRETIL). Goudriaan cites it as evidence that the yāmala genre is very old: the Vijñānabhairava already considers itself an appendix to the Rudrayāmala (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 40, 47).
- Beginning. Devī says that she has heard the whole teaching of the Trika from the Rudrayāmala, yet a doubt remains with her. What is the true nature of Bhairava? The totality of sounds (śabdarāśi)? The nine-part mantra? The three Śaktis — Parā, Parāparā, Aparā? Nāda and bindu? (verses 1–6).
- Answer. Bhairava answers that all the “formed” images of Bhairava are like Indra’s net, a dream or a mirage. They are described only for the meditation of people whose mind wanders amid the mass of rites (verses 8–10). The true state of Bhairava is free of direction, place and time (verses 14–22, in substance).
- Main part. Devī asks by what means one is to enter that state (verse 23). Bhairava sets out a long series of brief methods of concentration, beginning with the breath: the inhale “up” and the exhale “down” and the point of their arising (verse 24 and following). Note. The numbering of these methods is not discussed in my sources, so I do not give a figure.
- End. Bhairava bids her keep the teaching secret: better to give up one’s life than this supreme “amṛta” (verse 160). Then Devī, rejoicing, embraces Śiva around the neck (verse 162). Goudriaan cites this ending as a trait of an early source, “still free of later constraint” (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 26).
- Bodily instructions. Some methods describe a body position: sit on a soft seat on one buttock without support for arms and legs (78); sit with arms slightly bent (79); on a rocking seat (83) (Part IV, § 1.11).
- Commentaries. Goudriaan mentions Śiva Upādhyāya’s commentary, on verse 138 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 41, n. 40). There is no other information on commentaries in my sources (the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- Date. There is hardly any dating in my works. Mallinson and Singleton date the text to the 10th century (Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline; in detail — `datirovka`, no. 16).

17. Uḍḍāmareśvaratantra

- What it is. A treatise on the magic of the “six acts” (ṣaṭkarman). Goudriaan writes that it is sometimes confused with the Uḍḍīśatantra, a special version of which it apparently contains (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 119).
    - One of the versions of the Uḍḍīśa group — “the Uḍḍāmara or Uḍḍāmareśvara Tantra, alias Mantracintāmaṇi”. It is a dialogue of Śiva and Pārvatī, about 700 ślokas, usually 16 chapters. The terminology of the six acts is frequent in it, but the chapters are divided on other principles: “the manufacture of spirits”, the magic ointment añjana, love-philtres, etc. (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 120).
- Frame. The colophons: “in the dialogue of Pārvatī and Śiva, extracted from the Vīrabhadreśvaratantra” (GRETIL, M00169).
- What it consists of. 15 paṭalas (GRETIL; KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar) 70). In ch. 1 Gaurī asks Śaṃkara to tell her about subjugation, expulsion, stupefaction, immobilization, pacification, strengthening and much else (1.1–6). Śiva promises to extract the “essence from the Uḍḍīśa” and to teach the means — herbs and mantra japa — by which one can kill an enemy (1.7–10).
- List of acts in ch. 1: sending spirits, driving mad, enmity, expulsion (including from a village), immobilizing water and fire, subjugation. Then — blinding, deprivation of speech and hearing, sending “fever from spirits”, spoiling weapons, entering another’s body, the siddhis “the vetāla’s sandals” and others (1.11–17).
- Later chapters (by colophons and chapter openings, translation mine):
    - a means for conception (ch. 8, beginning);
    - the “tilaka of Kāma’s arrow” and powders (cūrṇa) (ch. 9);
    - “binding the quarters” (digbandhana, ch. 11);
    - the Cāmuṇḍā mantra (ch. 12);
    - the immobilization of knowledge (vidyāstambhinī, ch. 13);
    - the love-spell (ch. 14).
    - In M00169, the colophons also name a description of the “great potion of the caṇḍālī”, the “peacock’s crest”, the yakṣiṇī and the “servants” (ceṭaka), a compendium of mantras (mantrakoṣa) and the yantra of Kurukullā.
- Postures: ekapādasthita (“standing on one leg”) during japa, 12.30 (Part IV, § 1.12).
- Edition. J.D. Zadoo, KSTS 70, 1947 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 119, n. 32; GRETIL; Muktabodha). There is no date in my sources (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information).

18. Toḍalatantra

- What it is. A small Śākta text: about 500 ślokas in ten paṭala or ullāsa chapters. It is mentioned in some old lists and is often quoted, for instance by the Mātṛkābheda (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 81). On the whole, the group of texts about the ten mahāvidyās is, according to Goudriaan, late and apparently comes from Bengal or adjacent regions (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 86).

- The main theme is the ten mahāvidyās, i.e. the most important series of Devī's manifestations (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 81). There is some overlap in content with the Uttaratantra of the Rudrayāmala (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 81).
- Contents by chapters (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 81):
    - ch. 1 — the names of the mahāvidyās and their Bhairavas. Why Śiva serves Kālikā as a seat in the form of a corpse (śava);
    - ch. 2 — Kuṇḍalinī and her "pilgrimage" to the divine sphere;
    - ch. 3 — the yonimudrā, the bījas and the worship of the eight Kālīs and Tārās;
    - ch. 4 — the inner worship of Tārā;
    - ch. 5 — the worship of Śiva;
    - ch. 6 — Kālī's main bīja krīṃ and Tārā's bīja strīṃ, their symbolism;
    - ch. 7 — the body as microcosm (kṣudrabrahmāṇḍa);
    - ch. 8 — the liṅga and Kuṇḍalinī in the lowest cakra, the mūlādhāra;
    - ch. 9 — miscellanea, including Kuṇḍalinī in the form of a rosary;
    - ch. 10 — the "crow's beak" gesture and the identification of the mahāvidyās with the ten avatāras of Viṣṇu.
- The list of mahāvidyās with their Bhairavas: Kālī — Mahākāla, Tārā — Akṣobhya, Tripurasundarī — Śiva Pañcavaktra, etc. (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 81, n. 28).
- Discrepancy. Kṣemarāja mentions the Toṭula in connection with exorcism. That theme is absent from the Toḍala text known to us (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 81, n. 26). The list of 64 tantras that the Sarvollāsa quotes "from the Toḍala" is absent from the published text (Sanderson 2009, p. 241).
- Postures: yonimudrāsana (2.17–20): with the body straight, bring the nose to the knees, grasping the knees with the hands, together with breath retention (Part IV, § 1.12).

19. Vīṇāśikhatantra

- What it is. The only completely surviving tantra of the "leftward stream" (vāmasrotaḥ) of Śaivism (Sanderson 2009, pp. 46, 51; Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 36). The colophon: "the Vīṇāśikha, a yāmala-tantra in three hundred and fifty [ślokas], is finished" (GRETIL). In fact the edition has 396 verses (GRETIL; Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 36).
- Position in the tradition. According to Goudriaan, it is not the basic manual: it refers to earlier texts of the group (Sammohana, Nayottara, Śiraścheda; verse 4) and touches on a selection of topics without exhausting them. The text calls itself a "yāmala-tantra", but the Śiva-Śakti symbolism usual for yāmalas is not expressed here (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 36–37).

- Cult. The worship of Tumburu and his four Śaktis: Jayā, Vijayā, Ajitā, Aparājitā (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 37). Sanderson considers this cult very early (Sanderson 2009, pp. 50–51; `datirovka`, no. 19).
- Frame and course of exposition (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 37):
    - in Śiva's abode on Kailāsa Devī asks him to reveal the "five bījas and their secret form";
    - first the initiation rite is explained: the maṇḍala of Tumburu and the Śaktis (verse 26 and following); the disposition of the alphabet's letters in a 7 × 7 square (51 and following) and the "extraction" of the bījas;
    - the worship of the five deities — cursorily (94–118), while much more space, on Devī's new question, is given to special variants with an emphasis on magical applications (151 and following);
    - the teaching on kālatattva (233 and following): Śakti is present in the body as a fiery tube in the form of a "lock of hair" (tejaḥśikhā, 251), on whose tip Śiva dwells. Goudriaan sees here an early conception of Kuṇḍalinī; the nāḍīs are mentioned too (suṣumnā and others);
    - meditation on the fiery pillar rising from the lotus of the heart, like a thread or a "vīṇā's śikhā". Hence, according to Goudriaan, the text's name;
    - the end — the preparation of mantras, japa and homa.
- Manuscript and edition. The single palm-leaf manuscript is, according to Goudriaan, about 1200 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 36). Edition Goudriaan 1985 (GRETIL).
- Postures: padmāsanopaviṣṭa in the description of the deity, verse 96 (Part IV, § 1.12).

20. Tantrāloka of Abhinavagupta with Jayaratha's commentary (viveka)

- What it is. The main treatise of Kashmiri non-dual Śaivism. Abhinavagupta (fl. ca. 975–1025) sets out in it the Trika on the basis of the Mālinīvijayottara (Sanderson 2009, p. 46). It is not a scripture but an authored work, yet it is included in the list because it quotes and paraphrases numerous tantras.
- What it consists of. 37 āhnika chapters. Abhinavagupta himself gives their list in ch. 1 (Tantrāloka 1.278–284, GRETIL) and the content of each (1.287–328). The chapters' topics according to this list (translation mine):
    - 1 — distinguishing the kinds of knowledge;
    - 2 — the "methodless" path (anupāya);
    - 3 — the "supreme" path (śāmbhava);
    - 4 — the path of Śakti (śākta);
    - 5 — the "path of man" (āṇava): meditation, the "uttering" by breath (uccāra), karaṇa, varṇa;
    - 6 — the path of time;
    - 7 — the "rising of the wheels" (cakrodaya);

    - 8–12 — the “paths”: the path of places (cosmography), the path of tattvas, the differentiation of tattvas, the path of kalās and others, the application of the paths;
    - 13 — the descent of power (śaktipāta);
    - 14 — concealment (tirobhāva);
    - 15–21 — initiations: the beginning of initiation and the samaya initiation, the initiation “of the son”, the brief one, the instantaneous “exit” (sadyaḥsamutkrānti), the initiation “by scales”, initiation in absentia;
    - 22 — “extraction of the liṅga”;
    - 23 — consecration;
    - 24 — the funeral rite;
    - 25 — śrāddha;
    - 26 — “the remainder of life” (daily worship);
    - 27 — the worship of the liṅga;
    - 28 — rites for special occasions, including the “test of death”, the gathering of the yoginī, and others;
    - 29 — the secret ritual of the kula (rahasyacaryā);
    - 30 — mantras;
    - 31 — the maṇḍala;
    - 32 — mudrās;
    - 33–37 — the “unification”, the entry into one’s own nature, the reconciliation of the scriptures, the account of the transmission of the teaching and the grounding of the śāstra’s value.
- Yoga. In the list of ch. 4’s contents, the thesis of the “uselessness of the limbs of yoga” (yogāṅgānupayogitva, Tantrāloka 1.289) is indicated. For the path of Śakti Abhinavagupta rejects external auxiliary means (in my view, judging by the wording of the table of contents).
- Sources. Abhinavagupta abundantly paraphrases the Brahmayāmala and the Devīyāmala (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 40). According to Sanderson, chapter 29 relies on the Mādhavakula of the Jayadrathayāmala (Sanderson 2009, pp. 192, 294).
- Commentary. Jayaratha’s commentary (Tantrālokaviveka). Goudriaan dates Jayaratha to about 1200 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 60). Published in the KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar) in 12 volumes (Muktabodha; GRETIL).
- Postures: in ch. 15–38 (M00093) mentions of postures in ritual and yoga, Part IV, § 4.2.

21. Siddhayogeśvarīmata

- What it is. According to Törzsök, one of the demonstrably earliest written sources in which non-tantric, i.e. non-Vedic worship of female deities predominates. The text belongs to the Trika, i.e. the tradition whose centre is the cult of the three mantra-goddesses Parā, Parāparā and Aparā (Törzsök 1999, p. i). Sanderson names it among the texts of the Trika, alongside the Tantrasadbhāva, Devyāyāmala and Triśirobhairava (Sanderson 2009, p. 47).

- Relation to the Mālinīvijayottaratantra. The Mālinīvijayottara claims to derive from the Siddhayogeśvarīmata, and the Siddhayogeśvarīmata itself is said to count "ninety million verses" (Törzsök 1999, p. vi).
- What it consists of. 32 chapters (Törzsök 1999, note to ch. 16). General plan according to Törzsök (Törzsök 1999, p. i):
    - first the main mantras of the system are given, which are applied in daily worship, initiation and magic;
    - then initiation is described concisely, and together with it — the rules of conduct of the initiates, the transformation of the worshipper's body into a deity or the Female Power, and the structure of the universe, whose levels are ruled by groups of Mothers;
    - about two thirds of the text is various magic rites involving the invocation of the corresponding circle of deities, preceded by vows connected with protective mantras;
    - the last chapters are on the text's relation to other traditions and on its mythical "oral" transmission.
- Value.
    - It is the only text with a detailed iconography of the three main goddesses of the Trika, and it contains a remarkable passage on Bhairava's iconography (Törzsök 1999, p. i).
    - Chapter 29, on the kinds of women — embodiments of the Female Powers — served as a source for the Buddhist tantras of the Saṃvara cycle (Törzsök 1999, p. i).
- Redactions. Two redactions exist: a long one (known from the Kashmiri authors' quotations) and a short one (Nepalese manuscripts) (Törzsök 1999, p. v; `datirovka`, no. 21).
- Edition. Törzsök publishes and translates selected chapters of the short redaction: 1–8, 10–16, 18, 19, 21, 22, 29–32. The appendix has a transcription of ch. 9 (Törzsök 1999, table of contents).
- Postures: vīrāsana (16.47) and paryaṅkāsana (22.10) in Törzsök's edition (Part IV, § 14).

22. Tantrasadbhāva

- What it is. A Śākta tantra of the Vidyāpīṭha, connected with the Trika (Sanderson 2009, p. 47). According to Sanderson, it was redacted after the Svacchanda and before the Kubjikāmata (Sanderson 2009, p. 50). The tantra itself (1.13–14) declares itself one of two revelations based on the Siddhayogeśvarītantra; the other derives from the Yonyārṇava (Bang 2018, p. 84).

- What it consists of. 28 chapters (Bang 2018, p. 59). Bang publishes ch. 1, part of ch. 3, ch. 9, 18, part of ch. 24 and ch. 28. The chapters that strongly influenced the Kubjikā cult she did not include (Bang 2018, p. 59).
- Unpublished chapters (from the manuscript's colophons, Bang 2018, pp. 44–45). Chapter 16 = "yoginīlakṣaṇādhikāra" — the marks of the yoginīs of the 24 pīṭhas (the same theme as in Siddhayogeśvarīmata 22, whence the parallel to Siddhayogeśvarīmata 22.11–19); ch. 27 — a Raktākṛṣṭi section with a detailed udghāta. Bang did not publish them (gap A3, Part IV, § 14).
- Chapter 1 (Bang 2018, pp. 84–86):
    - the gods ask Ambikā to question Bhairava about the knowledge of reality;
    - Devī says she has studied the scriptures of the left and right streams, the yāmalas and the siddhānta; she lists the themes about which she wishes to hear;
    - she asks why the mantras given by Śiva no longer work;
    - Bhairava explains the inseparability of Śiva and Śakti, classifies the Śaiva scriptures (caryā, kriyā, yoga, jñāna) and passes to the teaching on the three main nāḍīs and the lotus of the heart, on the soul as bindu, on the coiled Kuṇḍalinī and her four forms (Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā, Raudrī, Ambikā), on the five Śaktis, the guṇas, the puryaṣṭaka, the ten winds and the nāḍīs.
- Chapter 9 — initiation (Bang 2018, p. 99 and following):
    - examination of the ground, construction of the ritual site, interpretation of dreams, drawing of the maṇḍala;
    - initiations along the "paths" (letters, tattvas, kalās, mantras, words, worlds);
    - the "stupefaction of the fetters" (pāśastobha); the yogic "exit from the body" (utkrānti, 9.299 and following);
    - consecration, vessels, sacrificial spoons, the seven "tongues of the flame", the final libation.
- Chapter 18 — the secret language of signs (chommā), at Devī's request (Bang 2018).
- Chapters 24–25. Redacted on the basis of the Svacchanda, ch. 7. They teach about external and internal time and about the breathing exercise that prolongs life, i.e. about "deceiving death" (mṛtyuvañcana). Part of ch. 24 on the signs of death is parallel to the Buddhist Vajraḍāka and Ḍākārṇava (Bang 2018, p. 79).
- Chapter 28 — the path of the soul (ātman) along the nāḍīs and lotuses (Bang 2018). Its verses 18–31 and 37–60 are parallel to the Niśvāsa, Nayasūtra 4.107c–144 (Bang 2018, p. 64).
- Manuscript. The main manuscript is dated 1097/8 (Bang 2018, p. 40; Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 39).
- Postures: none in the published chapters (Part IV, § 14).

23. Jayadrathayāmala, ṣaṭka 4

- What it is. The Jayadrathayāmala is an enormous yāmala. Per its colophons, 24,000 ślokas in four "hexads" (ṣaṭka). It is named after the epic hero Jayadratha, who received Śiva's grace after asceticism, and the text passes itself off as the revelation given by Śiva at that time (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 44–45).
- Parts. Goudriaan describes the parts as follows (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 45):
    - the 1st hexad is devoted to the worship of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī (50 chapters);
    - the 2nd — to the mantras of a multitude of deities, usually forms of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī or Kālī;
    - the 3rd — to various themes ordered by the "circles" of deities, including yoginīs;
    - the 4th hexad — to the worship of Kālī's manifestations in the circle called Rāviṇī, and definitely belongs to the krama or kula of this goddess (the Uttarāmnāya). Per its colophon it belongs to the Vidyāpīṭha of the "stream of Bhairava" and to the Śiraścheda.
- The 4th hexad according to Sanderson:
    - it contains a section "Kālikākula" with a chapter on the Rāviṇī maṇḍala (Rāviṇīyāgapaṭala); the maṇḍala is marked out with a string from a corpse and coloured with powder of human bones (Sanderson 2009, p. 208);
    - it includes the Mādhavakula (folios 117v–135v of the manuscript) (Sanderson 2009, p. 317). Its teaching on ritual and on the nine women of the lower castes as partners is paraphrased in Tantrāloka 29 (Sanderson 2009, pp. 192, 294).
- Electronic text (17.10.2026). Ṣaṭka 4 is available as Muktabodha M00681, data-entered from the manuscript NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 1-1468 / NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms) B 122/4 (the same as Sanderson's; 1626/7, 237/239 ff.). Before that date the corpus did not have the text; the place of the phetkārī-mudrā was checked only against the translation in Roots of Yoga (Part IV, § 10.3).
- Hierarchy of scriptures. The Jayadrathayāmala places above the Bhairava-tantras six Śākta tantras: the three tantras of the Trika, the texts of the Kālīkula, i.e. of the krama, and itself (Sanderson 2009, p. 47). Note. In which hexad this passage occurs is not indicated in Sanderson's quotation.
- Postures: phetkārīmudrā (4.2.612–622): sit down, place the left foot at the anus, stretch out the right leg, slightly bent. This passage exists for me only in Mallinson and Singleton's translation; the Sanskrit I do not have (Roots of Yoga 6.1.2; Part IV, § 10).
- Edition. I have no complete edition or electronic text (the needed work is not accessible to the AI).

24. Brahmayāmala (IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) T522; M00319) — a late “pratiṣṭhā-tantra of the Mothers”

- What it is. This is not the early Picumata-Brahmayāmala. Sanderson describes the manuscript in his bibliography as “Brahmayāmalākhyaṃ mātṛpratiṣṭhātantram” (“a tantra about the installation [of images] of the Mothers called Brahmayāmala”). According to his description it is incomplete and contains paṭalas 1–51.1–29b (Sanderson 2009, p. 315). In the same place he separately lists another manuscript, the Trivandrum manuscript no. 1982, “Brahmayāmalapratiṣṭhātantram” (Sanderson 2009, pp. 315–316).
- Frame. In the colophons the text calls itself part of the “Brahmayāmala in the collection of a hundred thousand [verses]” (brahmayāmale śatasahasrasaṃhitāyām, M00319, colophons). In my view, this is how the text claims membership in a huge ideal corpus. It does not mean that it is really taken from the early Brahmayāmala.
- What it consists of. 50 complete paṭalas and the beginning of the 51st. The topics are visible from the colophons (M00319):
    - Images and the sanctuary: the festival of the Mothers (mātrotsava), taking possession of the site (bhūparigraha), the marks of images (3, 40), Kṣetrapāla (4, 41), the sprouting of seedlings (aṅkurārpaṇa), the installation of the deity (6), installation and consecration (pratiṣṭhā), the marks of the pedestal (pīṭhalakṣaṇa).
    - Initiation and worship: the application of mantras (nyāsa, 8), the kinds of initiation and the purificatory bath (10), the worship of the Mothers, the fire ritual and “the nature of fire”.
    - Festivals: sixteen festive rites (utsava), drums and weapons at the festival, the one-day festival (23), the bathing of the image (snapana, 25), the raising of the banner (dhvajārohaṇa), the procession around the town (nagaraparibhramaṇa, 39).
    - Appeasement and offerings: the appeasement of the Mothers, the rite with the sacrificial animal (paśuvidhi), the offering on Tuesdays (kujavārabali), bali, the maṇḍala, mudrās (27).
    - Temple and renewal: the temple enclosure (28), the renewal of the dilapidated (jīrṇoddhāra, 34), the temporary sanctuary (bālasthāna, 35, 38), the re-consecration (saṃprokṣaṇa, 36), the “differentiation of castes by local custom” (37).
    - The trident and the rest: the installation, marks and consecration of the trident (śūla, 42, 44, 45), expiations (43), the pedestal for offerings (46), “the marks of yoga” (yogalakṣaṇa, 47), “the noose of the snake” (nāgapāśa, 50).
- Sample of content. Sanderson quotes 40.1–4b (Sanderson 2009, p. 282, n. 673): the image is made to the canon of “nine palms” (navatāla); the number of arms depends on the place of installation: eight in a village, four in a town, two in a forest, sixteen on a mountaintop, twelve by the sea.

- What is missing. There is no date either in Sanderson or in the rest of my works (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources). Research devoted specifically to this text the AI did not seek (the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- Manuscript. IFP, transcript T00522 (Muktabodha).
- Postures: padmāsana with the añjali-mudrā (Brahmayāmala: Muktabodha e-text no. M00319, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP transcript T00522; line number in that file: 994), ālīḍha (Muktabodha M00319, file line 3811). See Part IV, § 3.6.

25. Piṅgalāmata (Jayadrathādhikāra; Pratiṣṭhākalpa)

- What it is. A pratiṣṭhā-tantra, i.e. a manual on the construction and consecration of temples and images (Muktabodha, description of M00305). Sanderson counts it among the “early pratiṣṭhā-tantras” (Sanderson 2009, p. 280). In his words, the text was known to learned authors until the end of the 11th century (Sanderson 2009, p. 274, n. 651).
- Frame. The text is built as Piṅgalā’s questions to Bhairava. Goudriaan writes: “we learn nothing of her from the text” (translation: “we learn nothing about her from the text”). The second name, Pratiṣṭhākalpa, in his view “gives a better idea of the contents” (translation: “gives a better idea of the contents”, Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 46).
- Self-presentation. The introductory “Vyākhyāprakaraṇa” (“Guide to interpretation”) is, according to Goudriaan, “probably added afterwards”. According to it, the Piṅgalāmata belongs to the “Jayadrathādhikāra”, follows the Brahmayāmala and names Śrīkaṇṭha as author (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 46). Muktabodha adds that almost all early pratiṣṭhā-tantras are siddhānta, while this one is an exception: it assigns itself to the Śākta Brahmayāmala and to the Jayadrathayāmala (Muktabodha, M00305).
- What it consists of (per Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 46):
    - ch. I — the officiants, especially the ācārya and the sādhaka;
    - II and the beginning of IV — the gathering of materials;
    - III — the “liṅga with a face” (mukhaliṅga);
    - IV — images of the Śaiva deities;
    - V (short) — painting;
    - VI — the forms of the pedestal and the magic fruits of their varieties;
    - VII and following — temple construction, in VIII the ritual plan of the site (vāstucakra);
    - IX–X — private buildings;

    - the next chapters — the consecration of liṅgas and other objects; XVIII — the raising of banners; XXI — pavitrārohaṇa; XXIV — the types of sādhakas.
- The colophons of M00305 name the sections vyākhyāprakaraṇa, praśnaprakaraṇa, sāmānyaliṅgaprakaraṇa, citrādhikāra, pīṭhādhikāra and pratiṣṭhāpaṭala.
- Character. Śākta traits, according to Goudriaan, are “almost completely absent”, although in ch. XIX the author insists on advaita (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 46). Goudriaan supposes that it was a manual for *sthāpaka*s (priests responsible for the construction and consecration of temples) of some North Indian Śaiva school (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 46). Per Muktabodha, besides the siddhānta procedures the text gives the iconography of the Vāmā, Yāmala and Trika traditions.
- Other topics in Sanderson:
    - the image of Jayā and her sisters in a boat where Tumburu is the helmsman (Citrādhikāra, verse 35; Sanderson 2009, p. 51);
    - the armoury in the palace layout (10.28c–31; Sanderson 2009, p. 262, n. 618);
    - the layout of the royal palace (folios 74r–75v = 10.126–180; Sanderson 2009, p. 281, n. 668).
- Manuscript. NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 3-376/vi (Muktabodha). The terminus from the manuscript is 1174 (`datirovka`, no. 25).
- Postures: iconographic ones — padmāsana, vīrāsana, yogāsana, ekapāda, the Buddha in padmāsana (Part IV, § 5).

26. Kaulajñānanirṇaya (Mahākaulajñānavinirṇaya)

- What it is. The main work that the tradition ascribes to Matsyendranātha (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 50). The colophons say that the text was “brought down” (avatārita) by the venerable Macchaghnapāda / Macchendrapāda, “emerged from Candradvīpa” (candradvīpavinirgate) and belongs to the “Kaula of the yoginīs” (yoginīkaula) (M00027, colophons).
- Size. About 700 verses. The text is transmitted incompletely: two stanzas remain of the first chapter (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 50). There are 24 chapters, as the colophons confirm (M00027: “caturviṃśatitamaḥ paṭalaḥ”).
- Goudriaan’s assessment (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 50): most probably this is a collection of early teachings and rites of that branch of the kaula which traced itself back to the legendary yogin Matsyendra. The language is irregular, the exposition often unclear. The text is presented as Bhairava’s speech to Devī in such a way that the uninitiated without a guru is “left in the dark” (p. 51).
- Contents by chapters (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 51):
    - I (lost) — the inner creation;
    - II — the dissolution;

    - III — the inner liṅga made of lotus-maṇḍalas; the highest deity dwells in the lotus nirañjana; the external liṅgas are for the uninitiated (paśu); the inner liṅga is worshipped with “mental flowers” such as non-violence and restraint of the senses;
    - V, VI, VII, XVI and further — superpowers, especially the victory over death;
    - VI — the nature of the soul; VIII — the classes of Śakti; IX — the worship of the guru and the yoginīs; X — meditation on the bījas; XI — the ritual food (caru) of five purifying substances in the kaula variant; XII–XIII — rules of conduct.
- Ch. XIV. Relatively long, a survey of the psychophysical practices of kaula yoga. The description is “hampered by the author’s habit to content himself with casual allusions”, and most of the space is occupied by *siddhi*s (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 51). The colophon calls it dhyānayogamudrā (M00027).
- Further chapters: the *pīṭha*s (especially Candradvīpa); the embodiment of Bhairava as a fisherman who obtained the teaching of the kula from a fish (16.27 and following); the embodiments of the yoginīs and how to treat them (XXIII) (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 51). The colophons call ch. 12 “the marks of the bowl for caryā”, 13 “nyāsa”, 15 “the supreme vajrīkaraṇa”.
- Goudriaan’s conclusion (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 51): a resolutely kaula position combined with the practices of the siddhas, i.e. with yogic methods against old age, disease and death.
- Edition. P.C. Bagchi, Calcutta Sanskrit Series 3, 1934. The same volume contains the Akulavīra, Kulānanda and Jñānakārikā (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 50, n. 74; Muktabodha).
- Manuscript. One Nepalese manuscript. Goudriaan dates it to the mid-11th c.(?), Shastri — to the mid-9th c. (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 50, n. 74).
- Postures: ekapāda in visualization (10.1); the marks “tremor, leap” (14.21). See Part IV, § 5 and § 14.2.

27a. Parātantra

- What it is. A Śākta tantra. Goudriaan calls it “one of the most systematic sources on the Āmnāyas” (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 17). By his assessment, it is no longer as archaic as the Yonigahvara, but it contains material clearly based on old traditions (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 77).
- Frame. A conversation of Śiva with Devī (Kulyāsundarī) on the cremation ground of Karavīra. In the colophons the tantra is presented as part of a text of 12,000 stanzas uttered during the Great Karavīra-yāga, and as belonging to the Śiraścheda (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 77). Cf. the last colophon of the electronic text: “śrotaśiraśchede mahākaravīrayoge parātantre” (M00062).
- The initial question. Devī refers to the fact that 2.4 million ślokas have already been fathomed. She asks: if Śakti is one, as the Kulakulārṇava teaches, whence the six āmnāyas, six seats and six *nāyikā*s? (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 77).

- The scheme of the six āmnāyas (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 17, 77):
    - Eastern — Pūrṇeśvarī;
    - Southern — Niśeśvarī;
    - Western — Kubjikā;
    - Northern — Kālī;
    - Upper — Śrīvidyā;
    - Lower — the Buddhist Vajrayoginī.
- Contents (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 77):
    - Devī is the true cause of the world; she manifests in the five elements, and her highest form is identical with Brahman;
    - the author knows the cults of the āmnāyas well: he gives Kubjikā's 32-syllable mantra from the Kubjikāmatatantra (ch. 7) and discusses the variants of Śrīvidyā ascribed to Lopāmudrā and Kāmarāja;
    - the chapters on Kālī teach her three "divisions" — cakra, krama and kula; the Kālicakra consists of a bindu, a triangle, a penta- and an enneagon, and lotuses of 8, 12 and 16 petals; the krama is Kālī's fivefold manifestation.
- Discrepancy in structure. Goudriaan has four chapters: the first — a survey of the āmnāyas, the other three — on the Kālikula (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 77). In the electronic text M00062 there are eight paṭalas per the colophons: 1 — the Eastern āmnāya (Pūrṇeśī); 2 — the Southern (Niśeśvarī); 3 — the Western (Kubjikā); 4 — the Northern (Guhyakālī); [5] — Śrīvidyā, the Upper; 6 — the Lower āmnāya; 7 — "the sūtra on the determination of the order of Kālī" (kālikramanirṇayasūtra); 8 — "the determination of the highest goal". Note. Why the division differs, I did not find out.
- What is missing. There is no date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources). The source of the electronic text is not indicated in the Muktabodha header.
- Postures: ālīḍha, pratyālīḍha, yogapaṭṭa in the iconography (verses 59, 88, 104, 116). See Part IV, § 5.

27b. Kaularahasya (Sarvāgamasāra)

- What it is. A late Śākta compilation in the form of a conversation between Śiva and Devī (Pārvatī). From ch. 19 onward the colophons call it the "Kaularahasya — the essence of all āgamas" (kaularahasya sarvāgamasāre, M00326).
- State of the text. A single manuscript, NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 1-257 (reel A-146/8). According to Muktabodha, "many folios are missing". The colophons of ch. 1, 5, 6 and 14–16 are absent from the electronic text.
- What it consists of. 29 paṭalas and an appendix. Topics from the colophons and the internal subheadings (M00326):
    - the time of initiation (around ch. 5);

    - ch. 11 — the sādhaka's daily routine: rising at the "hour of Brahmā", ablution, sandhyā, tarpaṇa, meditation, worship, japa, homa;
    - ch. 14–17 (colophons of 14–16 absent from the electronic text) — yāga and "the drinking of soma";
    - ch. 18 — the Bhairavas of the ten Vidyās (daśavidyā);
    - ch. 21 — the lunar days for the worship of Devī, the rites during an eclipse;
    - ch. 22 — the curse (śāpa) and the story about it; why japa is performed at night;
    - ch. 24 — the "awakening" of the mantra (mantracaitanya);
    - ch. 25 — the puraścaraṇa of the mantra with its retinue, the "seven purifications" (saptasaṃskāra), the meaning of the mantras of the Upper āmnāya;
    - ch. 26 — the dissolution into Mahākāla;
    - ch. 29 — the marks of the yonimudrā, with a reference to the "Mantramuktāvalī".
- Appendix. Protective hymns-kavaca with the sources indicated (M00326): Śyāmā (dialogue of Bhairava and Bhairavī), Ekajaṭā (Yoginītantra), Chinnamastā (Bhairavatantra), Ṣoḍaśī (Kulāntasaṃhitā), Tripurabhairavī and Lakṣmī (Viśvasāratantra), Bhuvaneśvarī (Rudrayāmala).
- What is missing. The name does not occur in any of my eight works, so I have neither a description nor a date (the text is not mentioned in the AI's sources; the AI did not search beyond its sources). Everything said above is taken only from the colophons of the electronic text. In my view, the cult of the ten mahāvidyās and the quotations from late tantras point to a late text, but this is only my conjecture.
- Postures: ālīḍha (Kaularahasya: Muktabodha e-text no. M00326, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMCP Ms. No. 1-257 Reel no. A-146/8; line number in that file: 2509), see Part IV, § 5.

27c. Amṛteśatantra (the Netratantra manuscript of 1101)

- What it is. The same text as the Netratantra; for the description see no. 6.
- Peculiarities of the electronic text M00504. It is a copy of the Nepalese manuscript NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) pra-285 (reel B25/4), "dated Nepal samvat 320 i.e. 1101 C.E." (translation: "dated 320 of the Nepalese era, i.e. 1101 C.E.", Muktabodha).
- Colophons call the text "the Establishment concerning the Conqueror of Death, the Lord of Immortality, in the Essence of the Collection of All Streams" (sarvasrotasaṃgrahasāre mṛtyujidamṛtīśavidhāne). The last chapter is the 24th, on the greatness of the mantra (mantramāhātmya). In the KSTS edition (M00038) there are 22 chapters (see no. 6). Note. The chapter division in the 1101 manuscript differs from that in the KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar); I did not collate them item by item.

- No commentary. This is the bare text, without Kṣemarāja's commentary.
- Postures: see Part IV, § 1.4 and § 5 (the Buddha in padmāsana).

27d. Yoginīhṛdaya (with Amṛtānanda's Dīpikā)

- What it is. One of the two main tantras of the Śrīvidyā school, together with the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava. It is also considered the second part of the Vāmakeśvaratantra, i.e. its chapters 6–8 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 59, 62).
- Frame. The text continues the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava: Devī asks for an explanation of what remained unclear in the Vāmakeśvaratantra. Then the mysticism of the Śrīcakra and the vidyā is expounded (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 62).
- Size and structure. 376 ślokas, of which more than half fall to ch. III (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 62). The Dīpikā's colophons in M00115 call ch. 1 cakrasaṃketa ("the secret meaning of the cakra") and ch. 2 mantrasaṃketa ("the secret meaning of the mantra"). Chapter 3 in the electronic text runs to verse 3.200 and beyond, but the file has no final colophon.
- Style. The language is close to the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava but even more enigmatic. Without the commentaries and prior familiarity with the subject, understanding the argumentation is "impossible" (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 62).
- Chapter 1 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 62). The Śrīcakra is described as the primary manifestation of the Goddess: "When She, the highest Śakti… of her own will contemplates her creative effulgence (sphurattā), the cakra arises" (1.9c–10b, in Goudriaan's English translation). Placed on the points of the cakra are:
  - the nine "wombs" (navayoni);
  - the *kalā*s (nivṛtti and others);
  - the stages of speech from unmanī to bindu (1.26 and following);
  - the four *pīṭha*s (Kāmarūpa and others) with their liṅgas (1.41 and following);
  - Śiva as the Highest Light (1.50 and following);
  - the Mudrā-śakti (1.57 and following).

  The sādhaka must understand the whole system as present in his body (1.25; 2.8). The Śaktis Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā and Raudrī together with Ambikā are correlated with the four levels of speech (1.36 and following).
- Commentator. Amṛtānanda, a pupil of Puṇyānanda, probably a Kashmiri, lived in the late 12th — early 13th c. (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 152).
- Edition. Gopīnātha Kavirāja (Muktabodha; Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 152, n. 59).
- Postures: kāmeśvarāṅkaparyaṅka (1.52) — a "couch", not a posture. Seats in the Śrīcakra — sādhyasiddhāsana and others. See Part IV, § 5 and § 7.

B. South Indian Āgamas and Upāgamas (Śaivasiddhānta)

28. Kālottara (the South Indian version in 68 paṭalas; GOML (Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai); M00248)

- What it is. A siddhānta āgama. The Kālottara as such is an early text, known "in a number of redactions" (Sanderson 2009, p. 45). Goudriaan calls it "undoubtedly old" and often quoted (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 38). Our electronic text is one of the late South Indian forms of this name (`datirovka`, no. 28).
- Frame. In the colophons the text is called "the Kālottara in the collection of twelve thousand [stanzas]" (dvādaśasahasrasaṃhitāyām). In some colophons (13, 14, 35) it says "in the collection of three ayuta", i.e. 30,000 (ayutatrayasaṃhitāyām) (M00248). Note. This very fluctuation shows that the text is composed of heterogeneous parts; this is my conclusion.
- What it consists of. 68 paṭalas (M00248, colophons):
    - Ritual (2–19): the extraction of mantras (2), ablutions including with ash (3–4), flowers, perfumes, incenses (5–6), the "inner organ" (7), the worship of Śiva (8), mudrās (13), the maṇḍala (14), dreams (15), the "yogic initiation" (17), the sacrifice to Caṇḍeśvara (18), the royal consecration (19).
    - Yoga (20–27): the cakra of the nāḍīs (20), the cakra of time (21), the "yoga of touch" (sparśayoga) with meditation on the ten winds (22–24), pratyāhāra (25), dhāraṇā (26).
    - The paths (28–34): the path of mantras, the five paths, the path of tattvas, the path of letters, the path of *kalā*s.
    - Vows and gifts (35–42): the wearing of rudrākṣa, the vow of Kṛṣṇa-aṣṭamī, the 68 holy places, expiations, gifts: weighing on scales (tulābhāra), the "golden womb", the mountain of sesame, the gift of land.
    - Liṅga and temple (43–58): the manifestation of the liṅga, liṅgakalpa and the defects of stone, the marks of the liṅga, adhivāsana, the pedestal, pratiṣṭhā, snapana, the retinue of the deities, the temple, the layout of villages and towns, the laying of the foundation (garbhalakṣaṇa), "nirvāṇa" (nirvāṇa, 57).
    - The fivefold gift of the cow (60).
    - "The marks of the diamond door" (vajrakavāṭalakṣaṇa, 61–68): a series of *dhāraṇā*s — between the eyebrows (with the "halting of the army"), on the ears (with the cessation of hunger, thirst and sleep), in the heart (up to samādhi), the "lotus below the navel" (mṛtyuñjaya) and the "constant contemplation of the Ātman" (68).
- Yoga. There is much of it here: ch. 20–27 and 61–68 are in essence a manual of sparśayoga and dhāraṇā.

- What is missing. There is no dating of this particular version in my works (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources; the needed work is not accessible to the AI).
- Manuscript. IFP/EFEO (French Institute of Pondicherry / École française d'Extrême-Orient) T0059, a copy of the manuscript GOML R 14343 (Muktabodha).
- Postures: ch. 25.7–17 — 20 names of postures "in this tantra" and karaṇa; 63.7–9 — svastika/padmāsana with body position. See Part IV, § 2.1.

29. Acintyaviśvasādākhya (Cintyaviśvasādākhya)

- What it is. A late South Indian siddhānta text, one of the "scriptures" (upāgama). In the colophon of ch. 4 it is called cintyopabheda — an "offshoot of the Cintya" (M00272). Sanderson writes that, as into the Uttarakāmika, most of Somaśambhu's Paddhati passed into it (Sanderson 2009, p. 65, n. 73). Hence the text is younger than that Paddhati (probably 1073; Sanderson 2009, p. 65).
- What it consists of. About 80 paṭalas. Appended at the end of the electronic text is a further "festive" paṭala from the Yogaja (M00272, colophons). The numbering in the colophons is derailed in places: ch. 12–13 are designated as "29" and "30" and as "pūjārṇave śivakāṇḍe" ("in the Pūjārṇava, in the Śivakāṇḍa", Acintyaviśvasādākhyam: Muktabodha e-text no. M00272, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP/EFEO (French Institute of Pondicherry / École française d'Extrême-Orient) transcript T0007A and T0007B; line numbers in that file: 4195, 4946); there are repeated numbers.
- Survey from the colophons:
    - 1–13: the marks of the teacher, the "non-teacher" and the pupil (3–4); karaṇa (6); the sprouts (7); the samaya initiation (8); sandhyā (9–10); the worship of the Sun (10); the "initiation of action" (11); inner worship (12).
    - 14–24: the fire ritual (14); the worship of Caṇḍā, Ardhanārīśvara, Mahāgaṇapati and Kṣīpragaṇapati (15–17); the nirvāṇa initiation (22); the "three tattvas" (23–24).
    - The yogic block (25–35): the "yogic initiation" (25–26); "the rite of the eight-limbed yoga" (aṣṭāṅgayogavidhi, 28); the alchemy-rasāyana (29); the six *ādhāra*s (30); "the nine *ādhāra*s and Kuṇḍalinī" (31); the "ascent of the letters" (32); samādhi and the "king of samādhi" (33–34); "yoga without support" (35).
    - 36–45: the initiation of knowledge (36); the tattvas, the six paths (37–38); vijñānadīkṣā (39); the marks of samaya (40); consecrations — of the sādhaka, astra, amṛta (43–45).
    - 46–56: food, the worship of the bhaktas, Śivarātri, ghṛtakambala, "merit" (46–56).
    - Construction and consecrations: vāstuhoma; consecrations — of Gaurī, Vighneśvara, nandikeśvara, Viṣṇu (64), the Vidyā, the bhaktas, the gates; the daily festival; the raising of the banner; pavitra; damana; renewal; monasteries and ponds; wells; trees; funeral rites; the Śaiva śrāddha.

    - The end: "the determination of the castes" (78), "the arising of the elements" (79), "the ascent of time" (80).
- Chapter 78 and Sanderson. Sanderson quotes from "Cintyaviśva[sādākhya]", from the Dīkṣādarśa of Vedajñānaguru II, the lines: the division into castes was created by Māyā and only in Bhārata, it does not exist in other countries, therefore it is "a mere fiction" (Sanderson 2009, p. 289, n. 690). The same lines are in our electronic text, in ch. 78 (Muktabodha M00272, file lines 19202–19205: "…tasmāttatkalpanāmātraṃ jātibhedamitikramam").
- Śāktization. According to Sanderson, in the Cintya (as in the Raurava, Makuṭa and Sūkṣma) all the male deities of Śiva's entourage in temple worship are provided with their own Śakti (Sanderson 2009, pp. 286–287, n. 686).
- Citation. The text is first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II, 16th c. (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662). Moreover, Vedajñānaguru adduces from it a passage "obviously incorporated from the Somaśambhupaddhati" (Sanderson 2009, p. 283).
- Manuscript. IFP/EFEO T0007A and T0007B (Muktabodha).
- Postures: ch. 28.72–103 — 20 postures with descriptions (one of the most detailed passages in the āgamas); karaṇa; svastika; vīrāsana while eating, daṇḍāsana in the vow. See Part IV, § 2.2.

30. Suprabheda(āgama)

- What it is. One of the 28 siddhānta āgamas of the southern tradition. The electronic text has all four "parts" (pāda), although the Muktabodha header names only kriyā and caryā.
- Frame. Chapter 1 of the Kriyāpāda is "questions" (praśnavidhi). There the distribution of topics is announced in advance: the mixing of the tantras — in the Kriyāpāda; the origin of the Śaivas and the path of initiation — in the Caryāpāda; "everything about the support and the supported" (ādhārādheyakam) — in the Yogapāda; the order of creation by Śiva — in the Jñānapāda (Suprabhedāgama: Muktabodha e-text no. M00090, data-entered from the edition: śivāgama siddhānta paripalana saṅgham, devakottai, 1931; line numbers in that file: 82–100).
- Kriyāpāda: 56 paṭalas (M00090, colophons):
    - the extraction of mantras (3), purity and ācamana (4), ablutions (5–6), the parts of worship (7);
    - snapana (15), the "cold vessel" (16), the new food offering (17);
    - the ploughing of the site (25), the temporary temple (26), the vāstu of the temple (27), the sprouts (35);
    - the consecration of the liṅga (36), of sakala images (37) and of Śakti (38);
    - the installation of Jyeṣṭhā, Durgā, Caṇḍeśī, Kṣetrapāla (45–50);
    - expiations (55), the "mixing of the tantras" (56).

- Caryāpāda: 12 paṭalas. The origin of the Śaivas (1), the sixteen saṃskāra rites (5), vows and conduct (6), pavitrārohaṇa (7), expiations (12).
- Yogapāda. Begins with the “cakra of the nāḍīs” (1). The Ādhārādheyavidhi (3) contains postures.
- Jñānapāda. Begins with “creation by Śiva” (1). In the electronic text it breaks off at 3.230.
- Quotation on the connection of the parts (Muktabodha M00090, file lines 4008–4009): “kriyāpāde tu nipuṇaścaryā pādānuvartakam | yogapāde kriyābhyāso jñānapādānurañjakaḥ” (21-7). Translation: “[He is] skilled in the Kriyāpāda, follows the Caryāpāda; in the Yogapāda [he has] the practice of action, delighting the Jñānapāda”. Note. The syntax of the verse is shaky; the translation is literal.
- Date (upper boundary only). The Suprabheda is quoted in the Śivapūjāstavavyākhyā of the 13th c. (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663). The lines that the Ātmārthapūjāpaddhati ascribes to the Suprabheda are also in the Somaśambhupaddhati (Kafle 2015, p. 35; in detail — `datirovka`, no. 30).
- Edition. Devakottai (Muktabodha).
- Postures: Yogapāda 3.57–63 — six postures with descriptions; Caryāpāda 6.39 — vīrāsana as a feat. See Part IV, § 2.3.

31. Makuṭāgama (M00036) / Mukuṭāgama (M00424)

- What it is. Two transmissions of one siddhānta āgama (the Makuṭa, one of the 28). In the colophons it is called “the Makuṭa-tantra in the collection of three thousand [stanzas]” (trisahasrasaṃhitāyām) or “the great tantra called Makuṭa”.
- M00036 — a print edition in Grantha script by C. Swaminatha Gurukkal (Devakottai series), with M. Dyczkaowski’s preliminary corrections; “chapters 1–11” (Muktabodha). Per the colophons, 12 paṭalas:
  - 1 — “the descent of the tantra” (tantrāvatāra);
  - 2 — the order of worship (a very long chapter);
  - 5 — expiations; 6 — “the ripening of the fruits” (phalapāka); 7 — the lamps of the month Kṛttika; 8 — snapana; 9 — the laying of the “embryo” (garbhapratiṣṭhā); 10 — pavitrāropaṇa;
  - 11 — “the marks of yoga” (colophon: “yogapāde … lakṣaṇavidhi”);
  - 12 — the marks of the ācārya.
- M00424 — the IFP/EFEO (French Institute of Pondicherry / École française d’Extrême-Orient) transcript T00274. Colophons without numbers: tantrāvatāra, dīkṣāvidhi, the festival of Śiva (śivotsava, “in the Kriyāpāda”), expiations, phalapāka, snapana, pratiṣṭhā, “the rite of prāṇāyāma” (prāṇāyāmavidhi), the marks of the ācārya, the worship of Bhairava, the “upper cakra”, the “cakra of Ambā”.
- Differences. Note. The two versions partially coincide (tantrāvatāra, phalapāka, snapana, ācāryalakṣaṇa) but differ in composition. M00424 lacks the chapters on the Kṛttika lamps and the garbhapratiṣṭhā. Instead it has the initiation, the festival, and tantric chapters on Bhairava and the cakras. The chapter on postures in M00036 stands in the Yogapāda (ch. 11), in M00424 — in the prāṇāyāmavidhi.

- Śāktization. The Makuṭa is one of the four texts (with the Raurava, Cintya and Sūkṣma) in which, according to Sanderson, all the male deities of Śiva's entourage received their own Śakti (Sanderson 2009, pp. 286–287, n. 686).
- Date. The Makuṭa is first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II, 16th c. (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662). There are no other datings in my works (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- Postures: a list of six names — gomukha, svastika, padma, ardhacandra, vīra, yogāsana — without descriptions. Besides, 2-167 baddhayogāsana and 2-111 kūrmāsana (here it is a seat, a piece of equipment). See Part IV, § 2.4.

32. Jñānasiddhi(yāgama) (E0006)

- What it is. The text calls itself an āgama. However, according to Muktabodha's description it "reads more like a tract dealing a miscellenia of topics related to śaiva Yoga" (translation: "reads rather like a tract devoted to a miscellany of topics related to Śaiva Yoga", Muktabodha, E0006).
- Place in history. Sanderson adduces the Jñānasiddhyāgama as an example of a Sanskrit text where the Śaivasiddhānta is combined with Vedānta, Śākta kuṇḍalinī-yoga and the cult of Naṭarāja. In his view, such a combination is "unlikely to predate the twelfth century" (Sanderson 2009, p. 287).
- What it consists of. The sections are listed from the closing lines (E0006):
    1. "The descent of the tantra" (tantrāvatārasaṃhitādhikāra). Here the "definition of the eight-limbed yoga", the "purely Śaiva" doctrine (śuddhaśaiva, the "sixteen ends"), the "subtle siddhānta of Śambhu" (pūrvakāṇḍa) and the "joining of the three" (trimelana) are already announced.
    2. "The distinction of the marks of Śiva" (śivalakṣaṇaviveka); the "distinction of praṇava" (Oṃ as light); "the marks of Śiva" and a survey of the tattvas (the second chapter).
    3. "The countless kinds of sakala" (humans, gods, gaṇas).
    4. "The marks of the fetters" (pāśalakṣaṇa, the fourth chapter).
    5. "The five states" and "the kinds of states" (waking, dream, etc.).
    6. "The marks of knowledge", including an analysis of sāṃkhya.
    7. "The distinction of the Śaivas" — sixteen kinds, up to the śuddhaśaiva.
    8. A section on Vedānta (the great sayings, "thou" and "that").
    9. The "Compendium" (saṅgraha): the eight-limbed yoga and knowledge.
    10. "The view of the siddhānta"; sections on "tradition" (sampradāya).
    11. "The chapter on the eight-limbed yoga" (aṣṭāṅgayogapaṭala).

12. Another tantrāvatārapaṭala.
13. “The chapter on the eight siddhis”.

- Character. In my view, the combination of yoga, Vedānta (tvaṃ-pada, tat-pada) and the teaching of the “sixteen ends” (ṣoḍaśānta) confirms Sanderson’s assessment that it is a late syncretic text. I found no indications of place and time in the text itself.
- State of the text. The text is badly corrupt; the list of postures contains obvious distortions (Part IV, § 2.5).
- Manuscripts. IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) T0178, a copy of the manuscript GOML (Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai) R 16810 (Muktabodha). Another transcript — IFP 507, pp. 395–481 (Sanderson 2009, bibliogr.).
- Postures: in the chapter on the eight-limbed yoga, verses 13–14, — a list of names: padma, gomukha, siṃha, svasti[ka], vīra, sukhāsana, mayūra, daṇḍāsana and others. See Part IV, § 2.5.

33. Kāmika (pūrvabhāga M00124 / uttarabhāga M00125)

- What it is. The first in the canonical list of the 28 siddhānta āgamas; a South Indian temple āgama. Sanderson writes that the surviving Kāmika is “perhaps the first work of this kind to be cited in a dateable work”. Substantial fragments of it are quoted without attribution in the Jñānaratnāvalī of Jñānaśiva — the teacher of Trilocanaśiva and thus almost a contemporary of Aghoraśiva, who completed the Kriyākramadyotikā in 1157 (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663). The Uttarakāmika Sanderson counts among the late scriptures that borrowed from Somaśambhu’s Paddhati (Sanderson 2009, p. 65, n. 73).
- Pūrvabhāga. About 75 paṭalas; the end is marked “pūrvakāmikaṃ samāptam”. Topics from the colophons (M00124):
    - the descent of the tantra (1), ablution (3), worship (4), the food offering (6), the marks of the fire pit (7), the fire ritual (8);
    - time (9), the checking of omens (10), the checking of the ground (11), the sacrifice at entering (12), taking possession of the site (13), ploughing (14), the setting of the gnomon (15);
    - measuring instruments (16), the marking out of squares (17), cords (18), the marks of villages (20), the calculation of the yield āya (22), the name and nakṣatra (23), the number of brahmins (27);
    - the laying of the “embryo” (31), the temporary temple (32), the appeasement of the vāstu (34);
    - the building types nandyāvarta and svastika (40–41), the number of storeys (50), supports (53), ceilings (54);
    - the installation of the trident (66), of deities (67), of the pavilion (70), the enclosure (71), the worship of the entourage (73), the installation of the bull Nandi.

- The social theme in the pūrvabhāga. Sanderson quotes Pūrvabhāga 1.121c–126: only Śaivas, i.e. married Śaiva brahmins, have the right to perform rites for all. The gurus of other systems (the Yamala, the tantras of the Mothers, the Kapāla, the Pāñcarātra, etc.) have "absolutely no competence" in the Śaiva system (Sanderson 2009, p. 274, n. 652). Vedāntadeśika adduces almost the same passage as a quotation from the Kāraṇatantra (Sanderson 2009, p. 275, n. 654).
- Uttarabhāga. 97 paṭalas (M00125, colophons):
    - the bathing of the image (4), the daily and the great festival (5–6), nīrājana (7), the fires of the month Kṛttika (8), ghṛtakambala (10);
    - expiations (30), the "subsequent rites" (32);
    - the installation of chariots (71), the "marks of karaṇa" (72). Note. Judging by the end of the chapter, it concerns architraves and measures there, not postures;
    - the "rites of prosperity" (73), the protection of the king (76), the worship of Durgā (77), the sacrifice to the planets (81);
    - a series of gifts: Lakṣmī, the "sesame cow", a thousand cows, the golden horse, the gift of a maiden, the elephant (90–96), and others.
- Editions. The electronic text was made from the Grantha edition (Madras, 1909; Muktabodha). Sanderson 2009 refers to the edition of C. Swaminatha Sivacarya (Madras, 1975).
- Postures: pūrva 6.39 — "having assumed the desired posture, with a straight body, facing north" (at the pañcaśuddhi); in the iconography of the uttarabhāga — baddhapadmāsana, utkuṭāsana, vīrāsana (Dakṣiṇāmūrti); uttara 23.209cd–211a — karaṇa. See Part IV, § 2.6.

34. Aṃśumat (Aṃśumatkāśyapa, Aṃśumadāgama)

- What it is. One of the 28 siddhānta āgamas. In the colophons it is called "the Aṃśumat of Kaśyapa" (aṃśumatkāśyape). It is first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II, 16th c. (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662).
- What it consists of. 96 paṭalas, almost entirely on architecture and iconometry (M00198, colophons):
    - Site and foundation: ploughing (1), the socle (5), capitals (9), arches-toraṇa (13), doors (17), the decorative "nostrils"-nāsikā (21), the laying of the "embryo" (25).
    - Temples: temples of four, seven, etc. storeys (29–37), the bricks of the summit (41), the entourage of deities (45), Skanda (49), foundation stones (53).
    - Iconometry: female figures of "ten palms" of medium size (57); the canons of nine, eight and seven tāla (60–63).
    - Iconography of the forms of Śiva (mūrti): "sitting at ease" (sukhāsanamūrti, 64), with Umā and Skanda (65), Candraśekhara (66), on the bull (67), dancing (68), Gaṅgādhara (69), Tripurāntaka (70), the killer of the elephant (73), the begging Bhikṣāṭana (77), Liṅgodbhava (81).

    - The rest: the tying with cords (85), "mixed castes" (89), Caṇḍeśa (92), the measuring of land (93), villages (94), the temple of the liṅga (95), the renewal of the dilapidated (96).
- Extraneous insertion. A chapter has wedged itself into the file with a colophon of another text (Aṃśumatkāśyapāgama: Muktabodha e-text no. M00198, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) transcript 1; line number in that file: 11907). Note. This is a mistake of the manuscript's or transcript's composition; it does not belong to the Aṃśumat.
- Manuscript. IFP, transcript 1, from the palm-leaf RE (manuscript number in the collection of the French Institute of Pondicherry) 19987 (Muktabodha).
- Postures: iconographic ones — utkuṭikāsana (Muktabodha M00198, file line 6286), the chapter on sukhāsanamūrti. The word padmāsana here also denotes an architectural element — a lotus base. See Part IV, § 2.6.

35a. Mohacūḍottara

- What it is. An early pratiṣṭhā-tantra. Sanderson counts it, together with the Mayasaṃgraha and Devyāmata, among the "sub-corpus of texts of more restricted application concerned with the rituals of the installation of images and the consecration of temples" (Sanderson 2009, p. 45). It was known to learned authors until the end of the 11th c. (Sanderson 2009, p. 274, n. 651).
- What it consists of. The electronic text has four paṭalas (M00304, colophons):
    1. "On the unmanifested liṅga and the liṅga with a face" (avyakta, mukhaliṅga);
    2. "On the manifested liṅga" (vyaktaliṅga);
    3. "On the pedestal, the stone of Brahmā and the rest" (pīṭha, brahmaśilā);
    4. "On the temple" (prāsāda) — the longest.
- Content according to Sanderson. Mohacūḍottara 4.245c–281 (folios 20v–22r) prescribes the layout of the royal palace (Sanderson 2009, p. 281, n. 668). The temple-construction parts of the text (together with the Bṛhatkālottara, Piṅgalāmata and Devyāmata), in Sanderson's words, were being published and analysed by his pupil Elizabeth Harris in a dissertation then in preparation (Sanderson 2009, p. 112, n. 235).
- Manuscript. NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 5-1977 (NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms) A182/2), paper, devanāgarī. Per Sanderson 2009, it is a copy of a palm-leaf manuscript of the year 806 of the Valabhī era, i.e. 1125/6 (Sanderson 2009, bibliogr.; Muktabodha).
- Postures: the iconographic ardhavīrāsana (Mohacūḍottara: Muktabodha e-text no. M00304, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 5-1977 Reel A 182/2; line number in that file: 542), see Part IV, § 2.6.

35b. Yogaja(āgama)

- What it is. One of the 28 siddhānta āgamas. In the colophons of the electronic text it often calls itself a “pratiṣṭhā-tantra” (yogaje pratiṣṭhātantre), and once — a “pīṭha-tantra” (pīṭhatantre) (M00250). It is first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II, 16th c. (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662).
- What it consists of. About twenty unnumbered paṭalas (M00250, colophons):
    - the extraction of mantras, purity, ācamana, ablution, “the purification of oneself” (ātmaśuddhi);
    - worship (a long chapter), the worship of the sandals (pādukā), mudrās;
    - the bathing of the image, the “cold vessel”;
    - the great festival and the expiations for mistakes at the festival;
    - the installation of the “Kāmakoṣṭhā” — the sanctuary of the Goddess;
    - the lamps of Kṛttika, pavitrārohaṇa, the maṇḍala, “the determination of magnificence” (vibhava);
    - the food offering, the fire ritual, the marks of the fire pit, the pacifying homa and the vāstuhoma.
- Connections. One Yogaja chapter on the festival is appended at the end of the Acintyaviśvasādākhya electronic text (see no. 29).
- Manuscript. IFP/EFEO (French Institute of Pondicherry / École française d’Extrême-Orient) T0024, a copy of the manuscript of M.K.S. Bhaṭṭa (Madurai) (Muktabodha).
- Postures: Yogaja 25 — “having levelled the ground, sitting comfortably, facing north” (Yogajāgama: Muktabodha e-text no. M00250, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0024; line number in that file: 724), see Part IV, § 2.6.

35c. Sūkṣma(āgama)

- What it is. One of the 28 siddhānta āgamas. The colophons call it now “Sūkṣma-tantra”, now “Sūkṣma-śāstra”, sometimes “pratiṣṭhā-tantra”, the “naimittika-kāṇḍa” or “Kriyāpāda” (M00329). It is first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II, 16th c. (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662).
- What it consists of. About 59 paṭalas. Almost everything is temple and festive rites (M00329, colophons):
    - worship, ghṛtakambala, night worship, the announcement of the festival, the choice of time for the tīrtha, dīpāvalī, worship at the western gate (9);
    - the sprouting of seedlings (10), the raising of the banner (11, 19), the beating of drums (12), adhivāsana (14);
    - festivals: the “festival of the cord-amulet”, the powder festival, the sea bath, the festival of the bhaktas (15–21);
    - expiations for the deśika (22–23), the “full bath” (24), the installation of the liṅga (25), the festival by weekdays (26);

    - the marks of the ācārya and the pupil (27–28), the marks of images, the "96 temples" (30);
    - damanāropaṇa (34), worship "for oneself" (ātmārthapūjā, 35);
    - the installation of Gaurī, the marks of Devī, the great consecration (36–38), the sacrifice to the nakṣatras (40), the "great vow of pacification" (41);
    - pacification at bad omens, expiations for the village, the "play of the fish" (matsyalīlā), the extraction of pearls, the "wheel of worship";
    - the daily worship of Gaurī, re-consecration, the liṅga of clay, the worship of sandals;
    - the protection of the king (55), the guardian lamp, the "thousand streams", the marks of the nāgas (59).
- Royal ritual. Sanderson names the Sūkṣmāgama among the texts that have a chapter on the protective temple rite for the king (rājarakṣāvidhi; Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 664). In the electronic text this is ch. 55.
- Śāktization. According to Sanderson, in the Sūkṣma, as in the Raurava, Cintya and Makuṭa, all the male deities of Śiva's entourage in temple worship, "from the first of the Brahmas to the last of the Weapons", are provided with their own Śakti (Sanderson 2009, pp. 286–287, n. 686).
- Manuscript. IFP/EFEO (French Institute of Pondicherry / École française d'Extrême-Orient) T01003, a copy of RE (manuscript number in the collection of the French Institute of Pondicherry) 10779 (Muktabodha; Sanderson 2009, bibliogr.).
- Postures: ch. 19 — only "with a straight body, silently" (Sūkṣmāgama: Muktabodha e-text no. M00329, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T01003 copied from RE10779 of I.F.I.; line number in that file: 102), see Part IV, § 2.6.

35d. Candrajñāna(āgama), Vīraśaiva rescension

- What it is. A Vīraśaiva (Liṅgāyat) reworking of the āgama Candrajñāna. The electronic text was made with the permission of the head of the Jaṅgamavāḍī monastery in Vārāṇasī (Muktabodha, M00201).
- Frame. A conversation of Ananta-Rudra with Bṛhaspati, "the instruction of Śiva" (śivaśāsana). The text assigns itself to the "last part" (uttarabhāga) (M00201, colophons).
- Kriyāpāda: 12 paṭalas (M00201, colophons):
    1. the superiority of Śiva;
    2. the nature of the guru;
    3. the nature of the liṅga;
    4. the nature of the jaṅgama (the wandering Vīraśaiva teacher);
    5. the nature of pādodaka and prasāda (the water from the washing of feet and the consecrated remains);

6. the nature of bhasma (ash);
7. the nature of rudrākṣa;
8. the nature of the five-syllable mantra;
9. the “five rules of conduct” (pañcācāra);
10. the kinds of Śaivas;
11. the daily duties;
12. the obligatoriness of varṇāśramadharma.

- Caryāpāda: 7 paṭalas. Praise of the “sacrifice of Śiva” (śivamedha), conduct at the “exit” (utkrānti, i.e. death), the order of ritual officiants concerning the deceased, post-mortem rites, miscellanea, cleansing from defilement, expiations.
- Character. Note. The themes of ch. 2–8 (guru, liṅga, jaṅgama, pādodaka, prasāda, ash, rudrākṣa, mantra) correspond to the Vīraśaiva set of the “eight shields” (aṣṭāvaraṇa). This is my collation; it is not in my sources.
- What is missing. The Vīraśaiva recension is not mentioned in any of my works, so I have no date (the text is not mentioned in the AI’s sources; the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- Postures: only a prohibition: “prasārya na japet pādau kukkuṭāsana eva vā / yānaśayyādhirūḍho vā cintāvyākulito’pi vā” (translation: “One should not perform japa with legs stretched out, or else in the kukkuṭāsana, or mounted on a vehicle or bed, or being agitated by thoughts”). This is in the chapter on the five-syllable mantra (ch. 8, verse 81; Candrajñānāgama vīraśaiva rescension: Muktabodha e-text no. M00201, data-entered from the edition: jaṃgamavāḍī maṭha, ‹vArAnasI›; line numbers in that file: 1995–1996). A similar verse is in the Acintyaviśvasādākhya. See Part IV, § 2.2 and § 6.

36. Sakalāgamasārasaṅgraha

- What it is. A South Indian compilation of the “essence of all āgamas”. It is not a revelation but a digest of excerpts and ritual manuals from different sources.
- What it consists of. From the closing lines (M00063):
    - the daily routine: purity, ablution, daily duties, the worship of the Sun (twice, in different redactions);
    - rules of eating (bhojanavidhi);
    - daily worship — with the colophon “in the great tantra called Kāmika”; “daily duties”, the mantra of “breathing in life” (prāṇapratiṣṭhā);
    - a block from the Vātulatantra: expiations for the Kṛttika fires, baths of the image with 12, 25, 48 and 64 vessels;
    - the rite of the sacrifice at the four gates from the Kāraṇa; the treatment of nirmālya (the remains of offerings);
    - the “Protection of Skanda” (skandakavaca) from the Skandapurāṇa; the “Pentad of Bālā” (bālāpañcaka).

- Local anchoring. One line contains the dedication “to Śrī Ratnacaleśvara” (Sakalāgamasārasaṅgraha: Muktabodha e-text no. M00063, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) transcript T0351; line number in that file: 6996). In my view, this points to a specific temple, but this I did not check.
- What is missing. The name does not occur in any of my works. I have no date or description (the text is not mentioned in the AI’s sources; the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- Manuscript. IFP T0351 (Muktabodha).
- Postures: baddhavīrāsana while eating (Muktabodha M00063, file line 5224), see Part IV, § 2.6.

37. Śivadharma (the South Indian version; M00209)

- What it is. The Śivadharmaśāstra — the first and oldest text of the Śivadharma corpus. Kafle calls it a group of “non-tantric Śaiva works” (Kafle 2015, p. 54). It is an instruction for lay worshippers of Śiva. The datings (Hazra — 200–500; Bisschop — 6th–7th c.) concern the Nepalese text (Kafle 2015, pp. 54–57; see `datirovka`, no. 37).
- Is it the same text? Muktabodha warns that this South Indian version differs from transcript no. 72, and writes that its colophon lacks the words “uttered by Nandin”. Note. In fact, in the colophons of ch. 3 and 12 of our electronic text these words are present (“nandiprokte”, “nandiproktāyāṃ saṃhitāyām”, Śivadharma: Muktabodha e-text no. M00209, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP/EFEO (French Institute of Pondicherry / École française d’Extrême-Orient) 860 copied from R2442 G.O.N.L., Madras; line numbers in that file: 460, 4569).
- What it consists of. 12 chapters (M00209, colophons):
    1. the marks of bhakti;
    2. untitled (the sages’ questions about worship and the treatment of bhaktas);
    3. “the appearance of the liṅga” (liṅgotpatti);
    4. the chapter on the temple (prāsāda); 5–6. A single colophon: on the fruits of the six-syllable mantra, of the worship of Śiva, of japa and of fasting, together with the “chapter of pacification” (śāntyadhyāya), a long invocatory litany;
    5. the dharma of gifts;
    6. the fruits of gifting to Śiva;
    7. “the great vow of the liṅga”;
    8. rules of fasting and gifting;
    9. untitled;
    10. “the survey of the branches and sub-branches of the knowledge of Śiva” (śivavidyāśākhopaśākhāsamuddeśa).

- Character. In my view, judging by the colophons this is a text about bhakti, gifts, vows and the temple, not about yoga. Nevertheless it constantly extols the "contemplation of Śiva" (śivadhyāna).
- Manuscript. IFP/EFEO 860, a copy of GOML (Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai) R 2442 (Muktabodha).
- Postures: none. There is only the yogapaṭṭa as a gift to a Śaiva yogin (Muktabodha M00209, file line 4359), see Part IV, § 2.6.

38. Dharmaputrikā (Śivadharma corpus)

- What it is. The eighth text of the Śivadharma corpus in the Nepalese codices (Kafle 2015, p. 54). According to Barois, it is a systematic teaching on yoga whose aims are liberation (mokṣa), the acquisition of supernatural qualities (guṇaiśvarya) and the ability to change bodies (parapurañjaya). It is about 350 ślokas; the text was composed no later than the 10th c., and its 11th c. manuscript is kept in Calcutta (Barois 2017).
- Peculiarities (Barois 2017): detailed explanations of the inner respiratory processes and a unique exposition of how medical practices are incorporated into the course of the yogic path.
- Chapter 2, the *āsanaprakaraṇa (Barois 2017).
    - Verse 1: the yogin, "having purified mind and body by the eight means" just spoken of (i.e. in ch. 1), begins the practice of yoga.
    - Verse 2: having honoured his chosen deity and preceptor, pure, facing east, he assumes the postures.
    - Verse 3 lists eight postures: the lotus (padma), the svastika, the "throne" (pīṭha), the "mound" (sthala), the "folded palms" (añjalika), the half-moon (ardhacandra), the "staff" (daṇḍa) and the "all-auspicious" (sarvatobhadra).
    - Then each is described in order.
- Significance. According to Barois, this chapter is an "ancient and unparalleled testimony of a systematic and detailed description of a closed group of yogic postures". It is at least two centuries older than the description of postures in Hemacandra's Yogaśāstra (12th c.) (Barois 2017).
- What is missing. The chapters other than the second I have not read: the AI has neither the Sanskrit nor a translation of the whole text (the needed work is not accessible to the AI).
- Manuscripts and editions.
    - The Calcutta codex ASB (Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta) G 4077/3 contains nine texts of the corpus. Kafle dates it by palaeography to the late 10th — early 11th c. (Kafle 2015, p. 94).
    - Barois' text is based on an apograph of a 12th c. Nepalese manuscript from the Wellcome Library and on the Kathmandu edition of 1998 (Barois 2017). This edition Kafle characterizes as "full of mistakes" (Kafle 2015, p. 54).

    - A critical edition by N. Kafle and A.K. Acharya is in preparation (Barois 2017).
- Postures: 2.1–17 — eight postures with detailed descriptions (the lotus is described in most detail). See Part IV, § 6a.

C. Śākta and Kaula texts (late)

39. Kulārṇavatantra

- What it is. The most authoritative kaula tantra "of the second rank". Per its colophons it is only the fifth section (khaṇḍa), the "Mokṣapāda", of the original Kulārṇava in 125,000 ślokas. In reality the text consists of 17 chapters and about 2,060 ślokas (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 93).
- Goudriaan's assessment (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 94). It is one of the few tantras to set out kaula rites and ideology in the form of clearly ordered precepts; this contributed much to its popularity. The style is clear, the language on the whole regular. The main mantra is the bīja "sauḥ", called Parāprasāda. Establishing an exact date is "very difficult"; the latest estimate is about 1000–1400 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 94, referring to Carlstedt).
- Contents by chapters (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 94–96):
    - I — the lot of living beings in the cycle of births, in aphorisms, sometimes cynical. As Carlstedt proved, the chapter largely coincides with ch. XVI of the Garuḍapurāṇasāroddhāra; who borrowed from whom is unresolved.
    - II — praise of the kuladharma: it is above all seven "manners of conduct" (ācāra) and is transmitted "from ear to ear". Śiva says that he extracted it "by churning the great ocean of the Vedas and Āgamas with the churning-stick of wisdom". At the end (verse 113 and following) those who identify the kula with licentiousness are condemned.
    - III — the Ūrdhvāmnāya, to which the tantra assigns itself (3.1–47). Goudriaan notes that this diverges from the Parātantra's scheme (see no. 27a). Then praise of the mantra Parāprasāda.
    - IV — the sixfold nyāsa.
    - V — the implements and the "substances of the kula": wine (5.11–43) and meat (5.44–55). Wine is Śakti, meat is Śiva, he who partakes is Bhairava. Wine becomes nectar only for one who has tasted the inner amṛta from the union of Kuṇḍalinī with the "Moon of consciousness" (5.106 and following).
    - VI — the pūjā proper; VII — bali for Vāṭuka, Kṣetrapāla and Ucchiṣṭa-cāṇḍālī, the worship of woman as Śakti (7.36–57).
    - VIII — the seven stages of "delight" (ullāsa) and the Śāntistava.
    - IX — yoga and the yogin, in the form of a collection of striking sayings.
    - X — special rites (kumārīpūjā, the worship of couples).

    - XI — the conduct of the adept, especially towards women. Here is the famous saying: be a kaula at heart, a Śaiva in outward behaviour, and a Vaiṣṇava in public (11.83a).
    - XII–XIII — the guru and the teaching, ordered by numbers.
    - XIV — the kinds of dīkṣā; XV — mantras and japa; XVI — superpowers through mantras.
    - XVII — "mystic etymologies" of terms, e.g. svāmin from svāntaḥśānti ("inner peace").
- Editions. Numerous manuscripts and several editions. The best-known is Tārānātha Vidyāratna's (Tantrik Texts V, 1917). Carlstedt prepared a critical text of ch. 1–2 from about 20 manuscripts (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 93–94, nn. 7, 11). The Muktabodha electronic text was typed by Dr S. Malaviya.
- Postures: mostly prohibitions and general indications: 6.12 sukhāsana; 9.30 — "yoga is not [achieved] by the padmāsana"; 11.13 — the prohibition of vīrāsana. See Part IV, § 3.1.

40. Tantrarāja(tantra) with the commentary Manoramā

- What it is. The main tantra of the Śṛīkula on the sixteen Nityās. The text calls itself the "Kādimata-tantra", the "king of all tantras" (Tantrarājatantra 1.5 and following). The colophons of the electronic text: "ṣoḍaśanityātantreṣu śrīkādimate" ("among the tantras on the sixteen Nityās, the venerable Kādimata", M00122). According to Goudriaan, "Kādimata" is the line of Śṛīvidyā interpretation that the author adheres to; he opposes it to the "Kālimata" (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 64).
- Date (relative). The text is probably much younger than the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava and the Yoginīhṛdaya: far more details, new doctrinal features appear (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 64–65). The Tantrarāja that Jayaratha names as a source on the kula is a different text (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 65, n. 24).
- Influence. About 30 manuscripts; many quotations, e.g. twenty times in the Vidyārṇava (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 65).
- Commentary. The Manoramā by Subhagānandanātha of Kashmir, written in 1603–04 and completed by his pupil Prakāśānanda (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 65).
- Size and structure. 36 chapters. Published in two parts: ch. 1–18 (Lakṣmaṇa Śāstrī, 1918) and ch. 19–36 (Sadāśiva Miśra, 1926), both with the Manoramā (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 64, n. 23).
- Frame. Pārvatī asks Śiva to expound an independent tantra on the worship of the sixteen Nityās. The answer begins with a survey of chapters. Half the text is devoted to the Nityās; much space is taken by cosmology and the mantraśāstra, including the magical application of mantras (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 65).
- Contents by chapters (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 65–67):
    - I — teacher and pupil, the hymn to the guru (96–100), the astrological choice of mantras.

    - II — the gurumaṇḍala and the nine Nāthas who brought the tradition to earth; pratiṣṭhā and abhiṣeka; a litany to the Goddess as Mātṛkā.
    - III — the secret *bīja*s of the Nityās, and also of Vārāhī and Kurukullā.
    - IV–XXI — the worship of the Nityās (IV–VI are devoted to Lalitā; special cases — X–XI); XXII–XXIII — the goddesses of the bali offering.
    - 4.98–100 — Lalitā's secret form as the fourth vowel.
    - 25–28 — the "penetration" of the Nityās into Time, Speech (the alphabet), Breath and the Universe; the commentary counts 576 letter combinations.
    - XXIX, XXXI, XXXII — homa; XXX — the site plan (vāstudevatācakra) and the legend of the Vāstu-puruṣa; XXXIII — yantras; XXXIV — magical *vidyā*s; XXXV — the symbolism of tantric objects (vāsanā).
    - XXXVI — twenty questions of Devī and the answers to them.
- Assessment. The author combines an enormous number of ślokas with a scholarly, refined, non-repetitive exposition "in a good, though enigmatic style" (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 67).
- Postures: 27.59–63 in the chapter on breath (śvāsarūpa); the commentary counts 8 forms. Also 5.20 padmāsana. See Part IV, § 3.2.

41. Śāradātilaka(tantra) with Rāghavabhaṭṭa's commentary Padārthādarśa

- What it is. The second of the two main compendia of the mantraśāstra, alongside the Prapañcasāra. The Śāradātilaka is so close to the Prapañcasāra in the choice and order of material that one is "little more than a liberal adaptation of the other". Probably the Śāradātilaka is secondary (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 135).
- Author. Lakṣmaṇadeśika, a Śaiva religious head from the Varendra family. By tradition he is the pupil of Utpala, the theoretician of Kashmiri Śaivism. He is usually assigned to the 11th c. Goudriaan also cites Pott's words: "on en ignore la date" (translation: "the date is unknown", Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 135, n. 16).
- Style. Almost entirely plain anuṣṭubh, but with a masterly command of Sanskrit and a clarity rare for the Prapañcasāra (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 135).
- Size. 25 chapters, 3,489 stanzas in the KSS (Kashi Sanskrit Series, Vārāṇasī) 107 edition (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 134, n. 13). The Muktabodha electronic text contains Rāghavabhaṭṭa's complete commentary.
- The scheme of a mantra's exposition (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 136): the mantra in encoded form with its ṛṣi; the placement of the syllables on the body; the meditation verse (dhyānaśloka) with the deity's form; the surrounding deities; puraścaraṇa; the fruits.
- Contents by chapters (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 136):
    - 1 — cosmogony and embryology;
    - 2 — the evolution of sound and the basics of the mantravāda; teacher and pupil;

    - 3–5 — initiation (5 — especially homa);
    - 6–7 — meditations on the alphabet and its deities;
    - the mantras of Lakṣmī (8), Bhuvaneśvarī (9), Tvaritā and Annapūrṇā (10), Durgā (11), Tripurabhairavī (12), Gaṇeśa (13), Sūrya (14), Viṣṇu (15–17), Śiva (18–20), Gāyatrī (21);
    - magic weapons (22); Tryambaka and others (23);
    - yantras (24); yoga (25).
- Chapter 25 opens with a list of definitions of yoga: the unity of the soul and the Ātman, non-duality, the "consciousness of Śiva and Śakti" for the knowers of the āgamas, the knowledge of the Primal Man. Then it says that one begins yoga only after conquering the enemies — desire and the rest (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 136).
- Commentary. Rāghavabhaṭṭa, a South Indian scholar who moved to Vārāṇasī, wrote his commentary in 1494; the date is taken from his own closing stanzas. The commentary is valued for its knowledge of tradition and its many quotations (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 135). There are no fewer than ten commentaries in total.
- Postures: 23.131 — postures for ṣaṭkarman with definitions; 25.9 and 25.14–15 — postures in the chapter on yoga. See Part IV, § 3.3.

42. Gandharvatantra

- What it is. A voluminous Śākta tantra in 42 paṭalas. It describes numerous *vidyā*s and various sides of tantric pūjā; its main interest is the worship of Tripurā. The text is often quoted; a number of small texts ascribe themselves to it (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 73–74).
- Frame. According to Goudriaan, the tantra was "revealed by Dattātreya to Viśvāmitra" (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 73). The colophons of the electronic text have "in the conversation of Pārvatī and Īśvara" (pārvatīśvarasaṃvāde, M00646). Note. Both frames are in the text: at the beginning of ch. 1 King Viśvāmitra respectfully addresses Dattātreya, and the latter begins to reply ("viśvāmitra uvāca … dattātreya uvāca", Gandharvatantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00646, data-entered from the edition: Maharaja Harasinghji Bahadur, Srinigar, 1934; line numbers in that file: 773–789). Inside, judging by the colophons, the conversation of Pārvatī and Śiva is expounded.
- What it consists of. 42 paṭalas (M00646, colophons):
    - 1–5: introduction; varieties of vidyā; "the fifth vidyā"; the protective hymn-kavaca of Mahātripurasundarī "Bewitching the three worlds"; the yantra and the worship of Śakti's entourage.
    - 6–12: the order of the "yoga of action" (6); ablution and sandhyā (7); the place of sacrifice, the purification of the elements (8); nyāsa — the mātṛkā-nyāsa, the sixfold, the daily (9–11); "the yoga of meditation" (dhyānayoga, 12).

    - 13–21: outer worship and the fruits of offerings (13–16); manifest and secret worship of Devī (17); japa (18); the bali to Vāṭuka (19); the “leftover vidyā” (20); repairing the pūjā’s faults (21).
    - 22–30: the secret signs of samayācāra (22); kumārīpūjā (23–24); holy *pīṭha*s and worship in distress (25); the marks of the guru and initiation (26–27); puraścaraṇa (28); mastering the vidyā and her “three crests” (29–30).
    - 31–42: homa; the wearing of mudrās; the installation of the Śrīcakra (cakrarāja); kulācāra; desirable pūjās; the attraction of Śakti; the greatness of Śakti and the “perfection of the body” (dehasiddhi); how Śiva obtained Śakti, and the knowledge taught to him by Devī; the “instruction in the knowledge of the tattvas” (42).
- Discrepancy regarding ch. XXX. Goudriaan writes that ch. XXX expounds the teaching on kāmakalā (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 74). In the colophon of the electronic text ch. 30 is called “the mastering of the three crests of the vidyā”.
- Editions. Chattopadhyaya (1884), Tarkaratna and Nyayaratna (1886), R.C. Kak and Harabhatta Shastri (KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar) 62, 1934). Manuscripts are “not overwhelming” [in number] (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 74, n. 67). The electronic text was made from the last edition, from a manuscript in the collection of Maharaja Harisingh (Muktabodha).
- Postures: 6.5; 6.45–56 — five postures; the editors’ note on 6.57. See Part IV, § 3.3a.

43a. Viśvasāratantra

- What it is. According to Goudriaan, what has come down under this name “cannot properly be called a Tantra”: it is an encyclopedic compendium. In 8 paṭalas and 5,108 ślokas it sets out material on all kaula themes and contains yet another list of 64 tantras (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 97–98). Whether it coincides with the same-named tantra no. 38 of the Āgamatattvavilāsa list is unclear (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 97).
- What it consists of. Per the colophons of the electronic text (M00101):
    1. “the arising of the body” (dehotpatti);
    2. untitled (the postures are here, Visvasāratantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00101, data-entered from the edition: editor Chatterji; Calcutta, Pre-1900; line numbers in that file: 1561–1580);
    3. “the exposition of Pracaṇḍa-caṇḍikā”;
    4. “the exposition of Dakṣiṇa-kālikā”;
    5. “the establishment concerning Durgā”;
    6. untitled;
    7. “the thousand names of Mahiṣamardinī” (the colophon of the 7th chapter was not found in the electronic text).
- Citation. The Kaularahasya adduces from the Viśvasāra the protective hymns of Tripurabhairavī and Lakṣmī (see no. 27b).

- Edition. Typed from the Calcutta edition of Chatterji of the late 19th c. in Bengali script (Muktabodha).
- What is missing. No date either in Goudriaan or in my other works (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- Postures: the same block of five postures as in Śāradātilaka 25 (ch. 2), then svastika (Muktabodha M00101, file line 1664). See Part IV, § 3.3.

43b. Sarvollāsa(tantra)

- What it is. A compendium in 63 *ullāsa*s and about 2,250 ślokas (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 146). The colophon of the electronic text: “sarvānandanātha viracite sarvollāse” (“in the Sarvollāsa composed by Sarvānandanātha”, M00120).
- Author. Sarvānandanātha from Mehara (Tripura district, east of Bengal). According to Goudriaan, he is a celebrated siddha of the 16th c.; by tradition he owed his gift to Devī’s intervention during a rite on a corpse (śavasādhanā), and his memory is alive in Mehara (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 146–147). Sanderson believes that Sarvānandanātha wrote in Senhāṭī (now Bangladesh) and was born probably around the beginning of the 15th c. (Sanderson 2009, p. 241).
- Contents. The text contains, among other things, a list of 64 tantras (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 147) and refers to the Toḍalottaratantra (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 14). Note. There is no detailed chapter-by-chapter analysis in my sources. By the structure of the electronic text it is 63 short ullāsa chapters, i.e. a compilation of excerpts.
- Edition. Rasamohana Chakravarti, Calcutta, 1953 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 147, n. 33). The electronic text was edited by Gopinatha Kaviraja (Muktabodha).
- Postures: ullāsa 15, 8–13 — the block of five postures (a compilation), see Part IV, § 3.3.

44. Kaulāvalīnirṇaya

- What it is. The famous kaula compendium of Jñānānanda(giri) Paramahaṃsa. Nothing more is known about the author; the work is assigned to the 16th c. (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 144).
- Versions. There are at least two (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 144):
    - the long, standard one — 22 or 21 *ullāsa*s, about 3,850 stanzas;
    - the short one — 9 *ullāsa*s; it covers 2.50–15.118 of the long version in Avalon’s edition.

  The Muktabodha electronic text (editor Arthur Avalon) contains 21 *ullāsa*s.
- Contents by chapters (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 144):
    - I — a survey of the kaula tradition, its gurus and texts. Quoted: the Rudrayāmala, Brahmayāmala, Kuloddīśa, Phetkāriṇī, Tantrarāja,

Yoginīhṛdaya, Kulārṇava, Gandharva, Toḍala, Kubjikā and many others (n. 17);
    - II–IX — the general scheme of daily worship;
    - X — the conduct of the kaula; XI — the three “dispositions” (bhāva);
    - XII and following — rites for mastering mantras, including cremation-ground rites;
    - XV — the worship of virgins; XVI — the initiation of the partner;
    - XVII — kuṇḍalinī-yoga; XVIII and XX — *siddhi*s; XIX — the six magic acts;
    - XXI — the avadhūta.
- Style and sources. Occasionally the śloka is interrupted by kāvya metres. From time to time the author “suddenly starts copying the Kulārṇavatantra”. Examples: Kaulāvalīnirṇaya 1.23–31 = Kulārṇavatantra 1.7–18; Kaulāvalīnirṇaya 9.79 and following = Kulārṇavatantra 7.42 and following (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 144, n. 18).
- Sample of content. The rite of offering to jackals (śivābali, 9.46 and following): one who does not perform it is unfit for the worship of the Goddess of the kula (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 144–145).
- On oral transmission. Goudriaan quotes 1.20 and following: the fool who acts having consulted a book, instead of receiving knowledge from the guru’s mouth, will perish (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 12).
- Editions. Chattopadhyaya in the Vividhatantrasaṃgraha (1877–84); A. Avalon, Tantrik Texts XIV, 1928 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 144, n. 15).
- Postures: 2.76–78 — the āsanavidhi in pūjā; 19.32–39 — five postures and the kukkuṭa (in the chapter on the six acts); 21.5 — baddhapadmāsana. See Part IV, § 3.3 and § 3.6.

45a. Phetkāriṇītantra

- What it is. A genuine tantra by name, in reality a compendium (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 136). An important source on magic ritual (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 115).
- Legend. According to an old tradition, the powerful tantra was revealed by Bhairava Phetkārin (“the Howling One”), who attained siddhi by the mantra of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī. In the Āgamatattvavilāsa’s list under no. 2 stands the Phetkāratantra, so the eponymous deity, in Goudriaan’s words, apparently “changed sex” in the early period of the tradition (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 115–116).
- Size and frame. In the latest edition 21 chapters and almost 1,400 ślokas (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 116). The text assigns itself to the Paścimāmnāya (colophon of ch. VI) but shows no kinship with the texts of that group. Goudriaan writes that it is not a dialogue: at the beginning there is an invocation of Ugrakālī and a list of sources. Note. The colophons of the electronic text M00190 nevertheless contain “devīśvarasaṃvāde” (“in the conversation of Devī and Īśvara”).

- Contents (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 116):
    - I — the basics of the mantraśāstra; II — the forms of the fire pit;
    - III (long) — the worship and peculiarities of each of the six magic acts;
    - then the mantras of Kukkuṭā (IV–V), Ucchiṣṭa-cāṇḍālinī (VI), Dhūmāvatī (VII, XVII), Kālī and Durgā (IX, X, XII–XVI), Ugratārā (XI), Ceṭikā (XXI);
    - XX — the ten "purifications" of mantras;
    - XVI is similar to ch. XXXIV of the Prapañcasāra.
- Character of the rites. Many eccentric rites: worship on the cremation ground with human or animal flesh, amulets, meditation on oneself as a fierce deity, the "expulsion" of an enemy with dry leaves on the wind. In 15.234 and following Kuṇḍalinī, blazing, rises along the suṣumnā, seizes the enemy with her jaws and returns (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 116).
- Connections. The Kulamuktikallolinī draws from the Phetkāriṇī (Muktabodha, M00318); the Kaulāvalīnirṇaya quotes it (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 144, n. 17).
- Editions. G. Kavirāj, Tantrasaṃgraha (Vārāṇasī, 1970; Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 116, n. 16). The electronic text follows the edition of R.M. Chattopadhyaya (Muktabodha).
- Postures: 3/180–182 — postures for the six acts, including the ardhasvastika. See Part IV, § 3.4.

45b. Bṛhannīlatantra

- What it is. The "Great" redaction of the Nīlatantra, i.e. an example of a tantra that has a Bṛhat version (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 23). According to Sanderson, it follows the model of the Toḍala, which teaches the rites of only three goddesses (Kālī, Tārā, Tripurasundarī), but adds Kāmakhyā, the great goddess of Assam (Sanderson 2009, p. 242).
- What it consists of. 24 paṭalas. The chapter titles in brackets are taken from the electronic text (M00116):
    - 1 — the root mantra and sandhyā; 2 — the sixteen-part pūjā and hymns;
    - 5 — the description of the mistress [of the place?]; 6 — the rules of Śākta conduct; 7 — kumārīpūjā; 8 — purifications;
    - 10 — other sādhanas; 11 — mantras and variants of Nīlā; 12 — the pūjā in the order of creation; 13 — puraścaraṇa and the "sādhana of the hero";
    - 14 — the worship of Tripurā's maṇḍala; 15 — places for sādhana; 16 — rites by the twelve months; 17 — the fire pit and agnikārya;
    - 19 — secret mantras; 20 — "the essence of the tattvas".
- Edition. Madhusudan Kaul (Muktabodha).
- What is missing. No date either in Goudriaan or in Sanderson (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- Postures: 6.179–182 — postures for the six acts, see Part IV, § 3.4.

45c. Merutantra

- What it is. A tantra known mostly from passing mentions (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98). It has repeatedly been considered late because London is supposedly mentioned in it. Goudriaan allows that at least the core of the text is older. It is absent from the traditional lists of tantras and quotations are few, but the Siddhanāgārjunakakṣapuṭa names it among its sources.
- Size. In some manuscripts 15,000 ślokas and more, divided into *prakāśa*s (25, 35 or 50). Such a size may be explained by a commentary that has entered the text (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98).
- Frame. Śiva proclaimed the tantra out of compassion for the gods and sages who had taken refuge on Mount Meru from the demon Jalandhara (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98). The colophon of the electronic text: “the Merutantra, approved by Mahāmāyā and Mahākāla, proclaimed by Śiva” (M00195).
- Contents. A general survey of kaula ritual, built as a compendium: dīkṣā, puraścaraṇa, mantras of various deities; traditions of different schools are included eclectically (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98). The last *prakāśa*s of the electronic text are mantras of various deities, e.g. Śiva (31), Bhairava, Hanumān (34), Kārtavīrya Arjuna (35), and also yantras (33).
- Edition. The electronic text — with notes (ṭippaṇī) by Raghunātha Śāstrī (Muktabodha). Goudriaan mentions the editions: Lucknow 1907, Bombay 1908 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98, n. 24).
- Postures: postures for the six acts with definitions in brackets, taken from the Śāradātilaka (Merutantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00195, data-entered from the edition: śrīvenkateśvara, Bombay, 1908; line numbers in that file: 9207–9327). See Part IV, § 3.4.

46a. Vārāhītantra (M00317)

- What it is. A large Śākta tantra: 4,631 verses, 32 paṭalas (Muktabodha, Dyczkowski’s description; colophons M00317). Colophons: “the Vārāhītantra, in the nirvāṇa section of the Southern āmnāya, the descent of the most-secret tantra” (dakṣiṇāmnāyanirvāṇapade mahātirahasyatantrāvatāre).
- Connections and place (Muktabodha). Vārāhī is one of the eight Mothers. Lakṣmīdhara, in his commentary on the Saundaryalaharī, adduces a verse where the tantras of the eight Mothers are listed as a normal group; the tantras of the other Mothers have not been found. This Vārāhī connects itself with Kāmarūpa, where it was possibly composed.
- Character (Muktabodha). The text borrows much from other tantras but also contains much of its own: “a veritable compendium of śākta ritual procedures”.
- Citation (Muktabodha). It is quoted by the Mantramahārṇava, Tārābhaktisudhārṇava, Āgamakalpalatā, Saubhāgyabhāskara, Āgamatattvavilāsa, Sarvollāsatantra, the Bengali Tantrasāra, Lakṣmīdhara’s commentary and the Puraścaryārṇava (completed in 1775). Hence the terminus ante quem (in detail — `datirovka`, no. 46).

- Manuscripts. NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 3-315 (B 144/9). Another complete manuscript is in the library of the Sampurnanand Sanskrit University, Vārāṇasī (Muktabodha).
- What is missing. There is no detailed survey of the content in my sources (the AI did not search beyond its sources). The colophons of the electronic text give no chapter titles.
- Postures: ch. 26 — a block of haṭha-yoga postures close to the Haṭhapradīpikā; pīṭha = āsana. See Part IV, § 3.5.

46b. Ācārasāratantra (Cīnācāra; manuscript M00501)

- What it is. According to Goudriaan, Cīnācāratantra = Ācārasāratantra = Mahācīnakramācāra (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 23). According to Muktabodha's description, the tantra teaches "a form of extreme Kaulism called cīnācāra" ("the Chinese mode of conduct").
- Composition of the manuscript M00501 (Muktabodha). It is a composite manuscript NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 3-325 (B 116/8):
    1. four chapters of Svātmārāma's Haṭhapradīpikā (lines 1–1085 of the electronic text);
    2. the Ācārasāratantra proper;
    3. the treatise "Samayācāra" in 300 stanzas;
    4. a hymn to the cup of wine for the kaula rite, ascribed to the Rudrayāmala;
    5. the "Ulūkalpa".
- Important. The haṭha-yoga postures at the beginning of the file belong to the Haṭhapradīpikā, not to the Ācārasāra (Part IV, § 3.5, correction of 14.10.2026).
- Content of the Ācārasāra itself. Note. From the passages found, it contains, e.g., the rite in the straw hut (kusūla), where the yogin "with the bound posture" (baddhāsana) defies the cold (Ācārasāratantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00501, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMCP 3-325 Reel B 116/8; line number in that file: 2623). I have no complete survey.
- What is missing. Apart from the identification of names, there is nothing in my works: neither a date nor a description (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- Postures: in the Ācārasāra itself — baddhāsana (Muktabodha M00501, file line 2623). In the appended Samayāstotra postures are distributed over the six acts (Muktabodha M00501, file lines 4742–4744). See Part IV, § 3.5.

47. Mantrakaumudī

- What it is. A late authored manual of mantra practice (mantraśāstra), i.e. not a tantra-"revelation" but a scholarly compendium. According to Dyczkowski's description (Muktabodha M00229), the author is Devanātha Ṭhakkur: born ca. 1490 in Mithilā, lived and worked there, wrote not only on Tantra. He wrote the Mantrakaumudī at the age of 75, in 1564.

- Significance (Muktabodha M00229): “It mentions 99 works on Tantra” (translation: “99 works on Tantra are mentioned in it”). Dyczkowski adds that the universal recognition of this work started a new school of Tantra in Mithilā, “free of Vaama practices” (translation: “free of the practices of Vāma [the left path]”).
- Edition. The Muktabodha electronic text was typed from the edition: Mithilāvidyāpīṭha-granthamālā, Prācīnācārya-granthāvalī, “the eighth flower” (aṣṭamaṃ puṣpam). Editor — Śrī Ramānātha Śarman; preface and indexes — Dr Janārdana Miśra; Darbhanga, 1960 (śaka 1882) (header and title of the electronic text M00229, lines 1–47).
- Frame. It is not a dialogue. The text opens with benedictory stanzas and the author’s lineage. Stanzas 3–7 name his ancestors, his father Govinda and Devanātha himself “Tarkapañcānana” (Mantrakaumudī: Muktabodha e-text no. M00229, data-entered from the edition: Dharbanga, 1960; line numbers in that file: 65–87). In stanza 16 the author says he sets out the rules of mantra sādhana “briefly”, for those who find lengthy expositions beyond their strength (Muktabodha M00229, file line 83).
- The stanza on the content (Muktabodha M00229, file lines 93–94): “dhyānaṃ pūjanayantraṃ pūjāvaraṇāni devatāpīṭham | vinyāsādiviśeṣān yo veda sa kaumudīṃ veda” (translation: “He who knows the meditative image, the yantra for pūjā, the [deity’s retinue] surroundings at the pūjā, the deity’s seat, the peculiarities of nyāsa and the rest — he knows the Kaumudī”).
- Introductory polemics. Right after it comes a discussion of the authoritativeness of the āgamas compared with the Veda and the smṛti, with references to the Bhaṭṭa-vārttika and the Purāṇas (Muktabodha M00229, file lines 99–152).
- What it consists of. The text is not divided into chapters with colophons; it is a continuous exposition, without chapter numbers in the electronic text. I reconstructed the sequence of themes from the introductory phrases of the electronic text:
    - the choice of a mantra by nakṣatra and zodiac sign (Muktabodha M00229, file line 153 and following);
    - the checking against the kulākula table (Muktabodha M00229, file line 313);
    - the “sleep and awakening” of mantras (Muktabodha M00229, file line 354);
    - initiation and instruction (upadeśa, Muktabodha M00229, file line 841);
    - puraścaraṇa (Muktabodha M00229, file line 1082);
    - mudrās (Muktabodha M00229, file line 1271);
    - the removal of mantras’ “defects”, e.g. “mutilation” (chinna, Muktabodha M00229, file line 1934);
    - the ten purificatory rites (saṃskāra) of a mantra (Muktabodha M00229, file line 2265);
    - the astranyāsa according to the Śaiva āgamas (Muktabodha M00229, file line 2268);

    - viniyoga (Muktabodha M00229, file line 2980);
    - the general order of pūjā (Muktabodha M00229, file line 3954);
    - the homa “according to Sanatkumāra” and the measures of the sacrificial substances (Muktabodha M00229, file lines 4563, 4938);
    - the determination of the cardinal directions and the marking out (Muktabodha M00229, file line 5205);
    - the kuṇḍa (Muktabodha M00229, file line 5606).
- The second half — mantras of individual deities with the ṛṣi, metre and deity of each: Tārā, Ekajaṭā, Nīla-Sarasvatī (Muktabodha M00229, file lines 5980–5986), Lalitā/Tripureśvarī and Kāmeśvarī (Muktabodha M00229, file lines 6215–6220), Mahākālī (Muktabodha M00229, file line 6400) and others.
- Finale. At the end the author lists the sources he studied — tantras, purāṇas, smṛtis, jyotiṣa and paddhatis (Muktabodha M00229, file lines 6940–6986). Colophon: “iti śrītarkapañcānanamahāmahopādhyāyaśrīdevanathakṛtā mantrakaumudī samāptā” (translation: “Thus is completed the Mantrakaumudī composed by the venerable mahāmahopādhyāya Devanātha Tarkapañcānana”, Muktabodha M00229, file lines 6987–6988).
- What is missing (the AI did not search beyond its sources; the text is not mentioned in the AI’s sources). Neither the Mantrakaumudī nor Devanātha is mentioned in Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 or in the “Śaiva Age” (OCR search of both volumes). The AI did not seek other researchers’ opinions.
- Postures: a list of postures for japa — svastika, padmaka, vīra, vajra — with definitions, including from the Nāradīya; kukkuṭāsana, bhadrāsana; the prohibition of the utkaṭāsana in japa. See Part IV, § 3.6.

48a. Muṇḍamālātantra (I)

- What it is. A late tantra of the Kālī school and the ten Mahāvidyās. Goudriaan assigns it to the group of late texts that “as a rule” come from Bengal or adjacent regions. He calls it a more methodical exposition of the subject than in the neighbouring texts (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 86).
- Contents according to Goudriaan (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 86). The text is devoted to the worship of the ten Mahāvidyās in general and each in turn, starting from ch. VI. Chapter IV explains why Caṇḍikā, who receives the bali at the worship of the Great Goddess, contents herself with this offering of “inferior order”.
- Manuscripts (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 86, n. 47). Goudriaan knew of no editions. The manuscript RASB (Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta) 5972 has 15 chapters and 550 ślokas; several other manuscripts exist, mostly with fewer chapters.
- Our electronic text (Muktabodha M00537, editor Rasika Mohana Caṭṭopādhyāya). Nine colophons “iti muṇḍamālātantre pārvatīśvarasaṃvāde … paṭalaḥ” (“thus in the Muṇḍamālātantra, in the conversation of Pārvatī and Īśvara, the … paṭala"), and then a tenth chapter without a colophon. Note. Whether the division coincides with the RASB manuscript, I did not check.

- Relation to the Muṇḍamālā II (Muktabodha M00537): it is "a different text from muṇḍamālātantra II, though they coincide in their contents and concerns and belong to the same period. A fairly late tantra".
- Frame and structure from the chapter openings of the electronic text:
    - Chapter 1. Pārvatī says she has already heard many tantras, and lists them: Kālītantra, Kubjikā, Kālīvilāsa, Ḍāmara, Yāmala, Kālīsarvasva, Yonitantra, Sammohana, Vikrama, Kulārṇava (Muṇḍamālātantram 1: Muktabodha e-text no. M00537, data-entered from the edition: editor rasika mohana caṭṭopādhyāya; Calcutta; line numbers in that file: 49–53).
    - Chapter 2. Pārvatī's question is built as a list of things "without which" (vinā): without kumbhaka, prāṇāyāma, kullukā, japa, tapas, dhāraṇā, setu, etc. (Muktabodha M00537, file lines 322–324). In my view, this is a question about the path to success without these means; I read no further.
    - Chapter 4. Śiva tells the "deed of Durgā": "ekā durgā jagaddhātrī eko hi paramaḥ śivaḥ" (translation: "Durgā, the world-nursing mother, is one, the highest Śiva is one"). The Śaivas are his "parts", the Śaktis — hers (Muktabodha M00537, file lines 955–959).
    - Chapter 5 — the worship of the nine maids (Pārvatī mentions navakanyāpūjana, Muktabodha M00537, file line 1279).
    - Chapter 6 — Pārvatī says she has heard of śavasādhana (the practice on a corpse) and śmaśānasādhana, but has not heard a stotra or kavaca for them, and asks for a kavaca to be expounded (Muktabodha M00537, file lines 1561–1569).
    - Chapter 8 — "the secret of Kālī and Tārā" (colophon "kālītārārahasya", Muktabodha M00537, file line 3184).
    - Chapters 9–10 — Pārvatī says she has heard "in various tantras various teachings" (nānātantre … śrutaṃ nānāvidhaṃ matam) and asks that a means be indicated (Muktabodha M00537, file lines 3198–3204); in ch. 10 she again asks to reveal the secret (Muktabodha M00537, file line 3506).
- Date. Only "late" (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981; Muktabodha); no precise dating either in Goudriaan or in Dyczkowski (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information).
- Postures: 4.48–50 — the "twelve seats": bhadrapīṭha, padma, siddha, siddhasiddha, devyāsana, kukkuṭa, vīra, varada, siṃha, śmaśāna and others. Body postures and ritual seats are mixed here. See Part IV, § 3.6.

48b. Muṇḍamālātantra (II)

- What it is. The second text under the same name (Muktabodha M00538). According to Dyczkowski, it differs from the Muṇḍamālā I but coincides with it in content and time (see 49a).

- Size. Six colophons: “iti dvitīye muṇḍamālātantre … paṭalaḥ” (“thus in the second Muṇḍamālātantra, the … paṭala”; Muktabodha e-text no. M00538, data-entered from the edition: editor rasika mohana caṭṭopādhyāya; Calcutta; line numbers in that file: 154–1097). About 1,100 lines of electronic text.
- Postures. The stanzas on postures (Muktabodha M00538, file lines 479–487) coincide almost verbatim with the Hāhārāvatantra (Muktabodha e-text no. M00283, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 5-4798 reel number A 204/6; line numbers in that file: 11164–11171): bhadrāsana “destroys diseases”, kaurma gives yoga, padmāsana gives “all kinds of power”, vīrāsana — “all the siddhis”. See Part IV, § 3.6.
- What is missing (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources; initially overlooked by the AI, added later). I found no separate information on this text in Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, and did not analyse the content of its chapters in detail. The description here is therefore shorter.

48c. Hāhārāvatantra

- What it is. A kaula tantra of the Nepalese circle on the worship of the forms of Kālī with a clear preference for Guhyakālī (Muktabodha M00283, Dyczkowski’s description). The name means “the Tantra of the Roaring Haa, Haa”.
- Manuscript. NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 5-4798, microfilm A 204/6 (Muktabodha M00283). There is no edition; the Muktabodha electronic text is transcribed from the manuscript.
- Origin according to Dyczkowski (Muktabodha M00283). Guhyakālī is one of the most popular forms of Kālī in the Kathmandu Valley and almost unknown outside it. From this, and from the absence of manuscripts and mentions outside the Valley, he concludes that the text is probably Nepalese. Another sign is the typically Nepalese corruption mahākarmārcana instead of mahākramārcana.
- Self-definition. The text calls itself atharvaṇasaṃhitā, i.e. it assigns itself to the tradition of the “Atharvaveda”. According to Dyczkowski, probably because of the abundant magic, spells and potions. The colophon of the electronic text: “iti śrīhāhārāvataṃtre atharvaṇa saṃhitāyāṃ …” (translation: “thus in the venerable Hāhārāvatantra, in the Atharvaṇa-saṃhitā …”, M00283).
- Contents by chapters (Muktabodha M00283):
    - Guhyakālī is the subject of ch. 1, 3, 4, 6 (the thousand names), 11–14.
    - 2 — Pratyaṅgirā, another form of Kālī.
    - 5 — an extensive Kālikākavaca.
    - 7 — the worship of the goddess Turīyā.
    - 8 — the dhyāna of many kaula goddesses.
    - 9 — yantras.
    - 10 — magic rites (indrajāla), including remedies against diseases.

    - 11 — “milder” rites (prayoga), including for the good of others. The text constantly repeats that these rites, some of which are performed at the cemetery, must be carried out “nirvikalpena” — without hesitation.
    - 15 — the kaula worship of Kālī in eight sacrificial vessels.
- Date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information). For the text itself Dyczkowski gives no date. His “after the 14th century” refers to the Mahākālasaṃhitā, the main tantra of Guhyakālī, not to the Hāhārāva.
- Postures:
    - the block on seats, shared with the Muṇḍamālā II: bhadra, kaurma, padma, vīra;
    - ūrdhvapāde sthito;
    - padmāsanaṃ sādhayāmi … nāsāgre cintayen nityaṃ (Hāhārāvatantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00283, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMCP 5-4798 reel number A 204/6; line number in that file: 3768);
    - baddhapadmāsana.

  See Part IV, § 3.6.

49. Kriyoḍḍīśa(mahātantrarāja)

- What it is. A late text of the “tantras of magic”. Goudriaan assigns it to the so-called “Uḍḍīśa cluster” and lists it under no. 4: “The Kriyoḍḍīśatantra by ‘Indrajit’” (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 120).
- Common traits of the cluster (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 119). All versions share defective Sanskrit, a comparatively small size (about 400–700 ślokas), extensive parallelism with the Dattātreyatantra, and an introduction in ch. I of about 24–40 ślokas.
- Muktabodha’s description (M00512): “Deals with magic rites and mantras used to control others and to protect oneself from others” (translation: “Devoted to magic rites and mantras used to subjugate others and to protect oneself from others”).
- Author per the text itself. The first line of the electronic text: “śrīmadindrajitpraṇītaḥ kriyoḍḍīśamahātantrarājaḥ” (translation: “the Kriyoḍḍīśa, the great king of tantras, composed by the venerable Indrajit”).
- Editions. Per Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 (p. 120, n. 36): the edition in 21 paṭalas by Lalmani Sarma, Bombay, Venkateshvara Press, 1924; the 3rd edition was corrected by Baladeva Prasad Mishra, 1967. The Muktabodha header names the publisher of the electronic text: Caukhamba Krishnadasa Academy, Vārāṇasī, 1954 (M00512).
- Frame. A conversation of Devī and Īśvara (in the colophons also “Śiva and Gaurī”, “Umā and Maheśvara”). 21 paṭalas.
- What it consists of (paṭala titles in the electronic text):
    - 2 — a kavaca against all diseases;
    - 3 — the worship of the earthen (pārthiva) śiva-liṅga against diseases;
    - 4 — deliverance from ailments;

    - 5 — instruction in rites (vaśīkaraṇa and others by days, lunar days and nakṣatras; rosaries);
    - 6 — protective *kavaca*s for a woman whose children die;
    - 7 — yantras;
    - 9 — seats (āsana);
    - 10 — the śāktābhiṣeka;
    - 11 — the "possession" of a girl (kumāryāveśana);
    - 12 — subjugation (vaśīkaraṇa);
    - 13 — the rousing of enmity (vidveṣaṇa);
    - 14–15 — *kavaca*s for the six acts and for general protection;
    - 16–17 — the mantra of Tryambakī-Mṛtyuñjayā and her rite;
    - 20 — yantras, beginning with the vandhyāyantra, the yantra "for the barren woman";
    - 21 — vijayānupāna (the taking of hemp vijayā with milk).
- Date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information). Goudriaan gives no date.
- Postures: 9.1 — ekaṃ siddhāsanaṃ proktaṃ dvitīyaṃ kamalāsanam ("the first is called the siddhāsana, the second — the kamalāsana"). The following text already concerns the seat's material: on a tiger's skin — all siddhis, on a deer's skin — the siddhis of knowledge (Kriyoḍḍīśamahātantrarāja: Muktabodha e-text no. M00512, data-entered from the edition: Caukhamba krishnadasa academy, Varanasi, 1954; line numbers in that file: 391–392). See Part IV, § 3.6.

50. Parameśvarīmata

- What it is. A Nepalese manuscript from the circle of texts of the Kubjikā school (Paścimāmnāya). There is no edition; the Muktabodha electronic text is transcribed from the manuscript NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms) 5-5148, microfilm B 133/3 (Muktabodha M00218). The Muktabodha header contains no description of the content.
- Double name in the colophons. The colophons of ch. 27–39 call the text "pārameśvarīmata", those of ch. 41–56 — "kubjikāmata". One colophon has "kubjikāmate navakoṭisaṃhitāyāṃ" ("in the Kubjikāmata, in the Navakoṭi-saṃhitā", M00218). The last colophon: "iti śrīkubjikāmate ṣaṭpaṃcāśatitamaḥ paṭalaḥ samāptaḥ" ("thus in the venerable Kubjikāmata the fifty-sixth paṭala is completed").
- Connection with Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 56, n. 95). Goudriaan writes that ch. XXIV–XXXIX of the manuscript III.271 of the Nepalese catalogue (there titled Kubjikāmata) are identical with the manuscript III.364 G titled Parameśvarīmata. Its date H. P. Shastri estimated at the 11th–12th c. Goudriaan also mentions a composite Parameśvarīmata manuscript in the National Archives of Kathmandu and a Cambridge Parameśvaramata manuscript, dated by its colophon to 859. Note. Whether any of these is identical with NGMPP 5-5148 I did not check (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information).

- Beginning of the electronic text. Devī asks Śiva to tell the traditional succession (pāraṃparya): how the "Meru" arose and what its "extraction" (uddhāra) is; what the lineage (santāna) is from which the moving and the unmoving arose; about the sixfold kulāmnāya with the sixfold nyāsa (ṣoḍhānyāsa), about mantras, mudrās and vidyās. Then the goddesses dwelling "in the middle of Meru" are listed: Vāgīśvarī, Mahāmāyā, Cāmuṇḍā, Kula-nāikā, Mṛtyuñjayā, Mahākālī, Tōtālā, Tripura-Bhairavī and others (Parameśvarīmatatantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00218, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMPP manuscript 5-5148 Reel no: B 133/3; line numbers in that file: 32–50).
- Topics from the colophon titles:
  - 27 — mālinīnyāsa;
  - 30 — the extraction of graha;
  - 31 — the "five gems" in twelve ślokas;
  - 32 — kramapūjā and restraint (nigraha);
  - 33 — Kālajñāna-Saṃkarṣaṇī;
  - 34 — varieties of self-cognition (ātmasaṃvitti);
  - 35 — the extraction of Tripurā "in the middle of Meru";
  - 38 — garbhayāga;
  - 39 — the complete extraction [of the mantra] of Tvaritā;
  - 40–42 — the "determination" of Bhairavī, Tatpuruṣī and śāla.
- Postures: the prohibition of the utkaṭāsana in japa (Muktabodha M00218, file line 7107); svastikāsana at the mudrā (Muktabodha M00218, file line 8441). Besides, śūladaṇḍāsana — a term of mantra extraction, not a posture. See Part IV, § 3.6, § 8.

51a. Kubjikātantra (the Bengali one)

- What it is. Despite the name, it is not the early tantra of the Kubjikā school but a late text. Goudriaan: "A Kubjikātantra of nine paṭalas preserved at Calcutta is a relatively late text which probably hails from Bengal" (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 57).
- Edition. Per the Muktabodha header (M00030): editor Chatterjee; first published in the late 19th c. in Bengali script.
- Size. The electronic text has 17 paṭalas. The last colophon: "iti kubjikātantre mṛtavatsā kavacaṃ nāma saptadaśaḥ paṭalaḥ" ("thus in the Kubjikātantra the seventeenth paṭala, called 'the Kavaca for [a woman] whose children die'"). Note. Goudriaan speaks of a Calcutta manuscript in 9 paṭalas. Our text corresponds to it, apparently, in the part of ch. 1–9: ch. 9 ends in a full colophon with the frame "pārvatīparameśvarasaṃvāde". This is my conjecture.
- Frame. A conversation of Pārvatī and Parameśvara/Śiva.
- Chapters 1–9 (from the chapter openings):

    - 2–3 — "the meaning of the mantra" (mantrārtha): the meaning of individual letters (ka bestows the desired, ra destroys sin…) and an analysis of the Bhuvaneśvarī mantra;
    - 4 — the mantra of Pracaṇḍa-Caṇḍikā;
    - 5 — the "animation" (caitanya) of the mantra;
    - 6 — an especially secret teaching;
    - 7 — the *bhāva*s (inner "attunements") of the deity;
    - 8 — sādhana;
    - 9 — the signs of success in the mantra (colophons Kubjikātantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00030, data-entered from the edition: editor Chatterjee; Pre-1900; line numbers in that file: 322–2194).
- Chapters 10–17 — a "section on impediments" (bādhakaprakaraṇa) with prose instructions and commentary (vyākhyā). It includes:
    - rites against a woman's barrenness (Muktabodha M00030, file line 2206 and following);
    - the saṃkalpa vow against the "defect preventing conception" (Muktabodha M00030, file line 2375 and following);
    - mātṛkānyāsa and mudrās (Muktabodha M00030, file line 2951);
    - viśeṣārghya (Muktabodha M00030, file line 3119);
    - a remedy for male barrenness (puṃvandhyāpraśamana, Muktabodha M00030, file lines 3195, 3231; the colophon at line 3226 of file M00030 so calls ch. 15);
    - remedies for a woman whose children die (ch. 17, partially in Bengali, Muktabodha M00030, file line 3329 and following).
- Postures: in prose — bhadrāsane copaviśya ("having sat on the bhadrāsana", probably a seat, Muktabodha M00030, file line 2382). See Part IV, § 3.6.

51b. Kulānandādi

- What it is. A Nepalese manuscript NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 1-1376, microfilm A 40/6 (Muktabodha M00284). It is a collection of "short tracts and fragments of early Kaula works".
- What it consists of (Muktabodha M00284; colophons of the electronic text):
    1. Kulānanda — the first seven folios. Colophon: "iti matsyendrapādāvatārikaṃ kulānandasamāptamitiḥ" [sic] ("thus is completed the Kulānanda, brought down by the venerable Matsyendra", Kulānandādi: Muktabodha e-text no. M00284, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMCP 1-1376/ v reel number A40/6; line number in that file: 259). It is a kaula yoga of "piercing" (vedha) the energy of the subtle body's centres from above and raising the Kuṇḍalinī from below. According to Dyczkowski, the manner of exposition coincides with other treatises ascribed to Matsyendranātha and confirms that it is indeed an early kaula work.

2. The marks of the skull-bowl (kapālalakṣaṇa) — the next four folios. Colophon “iti kapālakṣaṇaṃ picumate” [sic] (“these are the marks of the skull — in the Picumata”, Muktabodha M00284, file line 274). According to Dyczkowski, it is taken from the Picumata (Brahmayāmala), which is quite possible, since that theme really occurs there.
3. The rest — precepts of kaula ritual: the “five shoots” (pañcapallava), the arches (toraṇa) of the cardinal directions, the ten flags (daśapatākā), etc. (Muktabodha M00284, file lines 458–483). The goddesses of the early period — Kubjikā, Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī, Bhagamālinī and others; Tripurā is absent, but Kāmeśvarī is present, one of her predecessors (Muktabodha).

- The Kulānanda in Goudriaan (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 52 and n. 77). The Kulānandatantra “deals with the obtainment of siddhis by meditation on the internal power centres”. It was published by Bagchi together with the Kaulajñānanirṇaya (pp. 107–113); the sole manuscript dates to the 14th or 15th c. Note. Whether it is the same manuscript as NGMCP 1-1376, I did not check.
- Postures: pūrvāmukha uttarāmukhaṃ vā padmāsanaṃ vadhvā (“facing east or north, having bound the padmāsana”, Muktabodha M00284, file line 451). See Part IV, § 3.6.

52. Śrīvidyārṇava(tantra)

- What it is. Despite the word “tantra”, it is a nibandha — a compilation of quotations with short connecting remarks in prose (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 71). It quotes no fewer than 88 sources (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 142).
- Author. Vidyāraṇya Yati. He calls himself a great-great-grand-pupil of Śaṅkarācārya himself, through Viṣṇuśarman and Pragalbhācārya (Vidyārṇavatantra 1.71 and following). Goudriaan considers this impossible and doubts even that this Vidyāraṇya is identical with the celebrated 14th c. advaita philosopher. However, the author’s belonging to Śaṅkara’s tradition is visible from his interest in its paramparā (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 71).
- Occasion. The text was composed at the request of King Ambādeva, son of Praudhadeva, king of Vidyānagarā (Vidyārṇavatantra 1.93 and following, per Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 71).
- The only original part (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 71) is most of ch. 1. It is a detailed exposition of the threefold guru tradition (divya, siddha, mānava) of the Śṛīvidyā school before and after Śaṅkara, with the division of the school into the Kādi- and Kālimata. There too are the gurus and deities of the six *āmnāya*s (1.310 and following) and the seven kinds of cakras (1.323 and following).
- The remaining chapters (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 71). The worship of the gurumaṇḍala and other matters concerning the guru are illustrated with long quotations from the Kulārṇavatantra, Tantrarājatantra and others; ch. II continues this theme. The other chapters are devoted mostly to the mantraśāstra, with special attention to fitting the system of sounds into the six cakras.

- Editions. Goudriaan used the edition of Bhasprasinva Sarma (Prayāg, 1966–67, in 2 parts). It has no fewer than 11 chapters (śvāsa), and the text breaks off at XI.78 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 71 and n. 52). The Muktabodha electronic text (M00217) is a different edition: editors Ram Chandra Kak and Harabhatta Shastri. It has 18 *śvāsa*s; the last colophon — "aṣṭādaśaḥ śvāsaḥ || 18 ||" (Śrīvidyārṇavatantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00217, data-entered from the edition: editor Ram Chandra Kak; Varanasi Tantrika Text Series, Varanasi, 1947; line number in that file: 40923).
- Attribution in Bharati. Per Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 (p. 71, n. 52), Bharati ("Tantric Tradition", p. 330) ascribes the authorship to Śivānanda Gosvāmin.
- Postures:
    - siddhāsanastho in the description of the guru (Muktabodha M00217, file line 2902);
    - baddhapadmāsano maunī (Muktabodha M00217, file line 21852);
    - baddhavīrāsana (Muktabodha M00217, file line 34193);
    - prohibitions in japa (Muktabodha M00217, file line 31865, quotation from the Mantratantraprakāśa).

  See Part IV, § 3.6, § 6.

53. Śaktisaṅgamatantra, Tārākhaṇḍa

- What it is. A large late "encyclopedic" tantra. By tradition — 60,000 ślokas in two halves of four *khaṇḍa*s each. The Śaktisaṅgamatantra itself (1.1.9 and following) says that the whole work was formerly called Tantrarāja: the first half — Kādi, the second — Hādi (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 69).
- The real size (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 69) is about 9,000 ślokas in four parts:
    1. Kālīkhaṇḍa — 21 chapters, 1,860 ślokas;
    2. Tārākhaṇḍa — 71 chapters, 3,409 ślokas;
    3. Sundarīkhaṇḍa — 21 chapters;
    4. Chinnamastākhaṇḍa — 11 chapters, about 1,582 ślokas.

  The number of chapters varies in the manuscripts.
- Character (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 69). The text is eclectic, attempting to harmonize the two traditions (the kahādi position). Much space is given to Kālī and Tārā, who together with Tripurā form a sort of trinity. The main part per the colophons is a dialogue of Akṣobhya and Tārā. The text speaks of geography, the history of religions (non-tantric schools are mentioned too, e.g. the Jains and the Vaikhānasas) and, of course, of tantric ritual. It is valuable as a source because of its encyclopedism.
- Date (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 69):
    - B. Bhaṭṭācārya (edition, vol. I, p. VI) — between ca. 1555 and 1607;
    - V. V. Dviveda — 1645;

    - Goudriaan: both dates are unreliable, but the last part of the 16th or the first half of the 17th c. “cannot be far of the mark”.

  Familiarity with western and southern sects points to a region south of the Vindhya mountains.
- Editions (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 67, n. 41). Bhaṭṭācārya published three volumes in the GOS (Gaekwad’s Oriental Series, Baroda): Kālīkhaṇḍa (1932), Tārākhaṇḍa (1941), Sundarīkhaṇḍa (1947). The fourth volume was published by Dviveda (1979). Our electronic text is vol. II, the Tārākhaṇḍa (Muktabodha M00119).
- Frame of the electronic text. Colophon: “śrīśaktisaṅgamamahātantrarāje uttarabhāge dvitīyakhaṇḍe śrīmadakṣobhyamahogratārārāsaṃvāde …” (translation: “in the venerable Śaktisaṅgama, the great king of tantras, in the second part, in the second section, in the conversation of the venerable Akṣobhya and Mahogra-Tārā …”).
- Size of the electronic text. The last colophon is the 47th paṭala. Note. Goudriaan gives 71 chapters; why the electronic text has 47, I did not check (initially overlooked by the AI, added later).
- What it consists of (the paṭala titles of the electronic text M00119):
    - 1 — terms (paribhāṣā); 2 — the hymn at the consecration (abhiṣekastuti);
    - 4 — the definition of āmnāya; 5 — brahmavīrāyoga;
    - 7–8 — the maṇḍala and the siddhis of the yakṣiṇī; 9 — “the exposition on seats/postures” (āsanakathana);
    - 12 — bhūtaśuddhi; 13 — kaula tīrthas; 14 — the worship of Śakti; 15 — gavākṣayoga; 16 — navarātra;
    - 20–29 — the order of worship of the Mahāvidyās and other goddesses: the ten vidyās, mahācīnakrama, Gandharvā, Chinnamastā, Bagalā, Mahārājā, Bhuvaneśvarī, Kamalā, Dhūmāvatī, brahmamārga;
    - 32–36 — the conventional signs of the mudrā, of drinking, of latā (“creepers”, i.e. the female partner), the night pūjā;
    - 37 — the secret of the Śakti-saṅgama; 38 — vīrasādhana; 39 — muṇḍāsana (the seat of skulls);
    - 40–41 — rosaries; 44 — the sādhana of Sundarī; 45 — ritual impurity (sūtaka); 46 — rules of japa; 47 — “aśvāsana” (Note. the meaning of the title unchecked).
- Postures: vīrāsanaṃ … mahāvīrāsanaṃ, pañcavīrāsana (Śaktisaṃgamatantra tārākhanda: Muktabodha e-text no. M00119, data-entered from the edition: editor baṭṭācārya b; Baroda Oriental Institute, Baroda, 1941; line numbers in that file: 1475–1611, 4107, 4122). In the Śākta context vīrāsana often means the hero’s seat, e.g. on a corpse. See Part IV, § 3.6.

54a. Mahānirvāṇatantra

- What it is. According to Goudriaan, as of 1981 this was probably the best-known "original" tantra and possibly the youngest (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98).
- Date (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 98–99, n. 26). With almost complete certainty — the second half of the 18th c.: the text is not mentioned in earlier sources and lists, manuscripts are few, the only commentary is by Hariharānanda Bhāratī, the guru of Rammohun Roy, 19th c. Farquhar — 18th c.; Derrett — "between 1773 and 1780". Bharati, without arguments, writes now "usually assigned to the 11th century", now "probably written in the 7th century".
- Assessments. Derrett calls the text a "well-intentioned fraud". The author, possibly Hariharānanda's guru, per Derrett "was evidently writing for those who wanted a practical guide for legal as well as spiritual life" (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 99). Goudriaan believes the main aim was to offer a purified, universally accessible form of the tantric religion as an alternative to Islamic and Christian preaching. He notes the coherence, clarity of style and fairly correct language (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 99).
- Size and frame (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 99). 2,522 ślokas in 14 chapters (ullāsa). A dialogue of Śiva and Devī under the names Sadāśiva and Pārvatī/Ādyā-Kālī. The description of the conversation's setting coincides with the beginning of one of the Uḍḍīśatantra versions (cf. Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 120).
- Contents (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 99–101):
    - I — Devī reminds of the degradation from the Kṛta-yuga to the Kali-yuga: the Vedas → smṛtis → saṃhitās → tantras, which too were applied wrongly.
    - II–III — the teaching on the Supreme Brahman and its worship with the mantra "Oṃ sac cid ekam brahma". Goudriaan considers this part one of the most original. During the worship no caste distinctions are made (3.92).
    - IV — kaula rites in the Kali-yuga must not be secret, because concealment equals untruth (4.75 and following) — a characteristic departure from the Kulārṇavatantra.
    - V–VI — the daily worship of Ādyā-Kālī; the pañcatattva may be consecrated with Vedic mantras.
    - VII — the stotra and kavaca of Ādyā-Kālī.
    - VIII — varṇāśramadharma with a conservative ethics; an insertion on the bhairavīcakra and the tattvacakra (8.155–219).
    - IX — the *saṃskāra*s; X — funeral rites; XI — sins and expiations; XII — inheritance.
    - XIII — the consecration of images, houses, wells, including the pillar of the nāgas (nāgastambha).

    - XIV — the immovable liṅga; karma, Brahman, avadhūtas and yogins; praise of the kuladharma and of the Mahānirvāṇatantra itself.

  Most of the text is devoted to law: marriage, inheritance and caste rules. The precepts often depart noticeably from the traditional dharmaśāstra; the influence of English law is possible (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 99).
- Editions (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98, n. 25). No fewer than 18 editions before 1930. Editio princeps — Ānandacandra Vidyāvāgīśa, Ādi Brahmo Samāj, Calcutta, 1876. The best known — A. Avalon's (Tantrik Texts 13, 1929). Avalon's translation "The Great Liberation" — 1913. The Muktabodha electronic text (M00049) — Avalon's edition with Hariharānanda Bhāratī's commentary; the Muktabodha header: Luzac and Company, Calcutta, 1926.
- Postures: 3.51 — baddhapadmāsanādīni gaditāny api bhūriśaḥ; the commentary adds the muktapadmāsana. See Part IV, § 3.6.

54b. Kulamuktikallolinī

- What it is. A nibandha, a compendium of Śākta ritual, especially of the worship of Kālī. More than 9,000 stanzas in 22 chapters (Muktabodha M00318, Dyczkowski's description). Goudriaan: "about 9000 ślokas dealing with 'Tantra worship in general, with special reference to Kālī'" (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 146).
- Author (Muktabodha M00318). Navamīsiṃha, alias Ādyānanda. At the beginning of his Tantracintāmaṇi he calls himself the minister of the Nepalese king Bhūpālendra. According to Dyczkowski, this is probably Mahīndra Malla or Bhūpālandra Malla of Kathmandu, who ruled about five years between 1689 and 1694. The colophons of the electronic text: "iti śrī-ādyānandaviracitāyāṃ kulamuktikallolinyāṃ … paṭalaḥ" ("thus in the Kulamuktikallolinī composed by the venerable Ādyānanda, the … paṭala").
- Sources (Muktabodha M00318). An enormous number: the Kulacūḍāmaṇi, Rudrayāmala, Kumārītantra, Mahākālasaṃhitā, Phetkāriṇī, Kālītantra, Svatantra, Merutantra, Piṅgalāmata, Kulārṇava, Somaśambhupaddhati, Śivasadbhāva, Yoginītantra, Siddhayāmala and many others. The author himself writes little. He draws from tantras of all schools, including the siddhānta, but clearly prefers the late kaula Śākta tantras.
- Construction (Muktabodha M00318). The main interest is ritual, set out systematically, chapter by chapter. It begins with dīkṣā; then come the pūjā rites:
    - the making and cleansing of fire pits, agnisaṃskāra and mantras;
    - the daily rites (nityavidhi);
    - rites and mantras for those setting out on a journey;
    - bhūtaśuddhi;
    - the setting up of the oblation vessel (arghasthāpana), etc.
- Value. According to Dyczkowski, it is an unoriginal work, but it contains interesting and important material, often from unpublished sources. Such compendia become popular from about the 12th c. and are often dated by the compiler's time (Muktabodha M00318).

- Manuscript. NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 1-1675, microfilm B 120/6 (Muktabodha M00318); the electronic text is transcribed from it. The electronic text has 17 complete colophons, the last found being the 20th paṭala; end: "… paṭalaḥ samāptaḥ" (Muktabodha e-text no. M00318, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMCP Manuscript No. 1-1675 Reel No. B 120/6; line number in that file: 36115).
- Postures: it quotes the "Gorakṣasaṃhitā" on vīrāsana, and also the ritual postures of ṣaṭkarman: padma, svastika, vikaṭa, kukkuṭa, vajra, bhadra (Muktabodha M00318, file lines 11025–11036, 30761–30789). See Part IV, § 3.6.

D. Paddhatis (manuals)

55. Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati (Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati)

- What it is. A large South Indian (Kerala) manual of siddhānta ritual. It is an authored work (paddhati), not a "revelation". Bang calls it "the late Saiddhāntika ritual manual" (Bang 2018, p. 362).
- Author. Īśānaśiva(gurudeva), in the first colophon — "Īśānaśivagurudevamiśra" (M00016). Colophons: "iti śrīmadīśānaśivagurudevamiśraviracite tantrasārapaddhatau …" (translation: "thus in the Tantrasāra-paddhati composed by the venerable Īśānaśiva-gurudeva-miśra …").
- Edition. T. Gaṇapati Śāstrī, 4 volumes, Trivandrum Sanskrit Series (University of Trivandrum, 1921–1922) (the Muktabodha headers M00016, M00017, M00018, M00233). Sanderson 2009 gives the series numbers 60, 72, 77 and 83 (Sanderson 2009, bibliography). Note. The header of M00233 says "Volume 3 of 4", although it is volume 4.
- Two halves per the colophons of the electronic text:
  - Pūrvārdha — the "Tantrasāra": at the end of vol. 2, "samāptaṃ ca pūrvārdham" ("and the first half is completed", Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati Volume 2: Muktabodha e-text no. M00017, data-entered from the edition: editor gaṇapati śāstrī; bharatiya vidya prakāśan, Delhi, 1922; line number in that file: 14674).
  - Uparibhāga — the "Siddhāntasāra": the colophons of vol. 3–4, "siddhāntasāre uparibhāge kriyāpāde …".
- Four parts (pāda):
  1. Sāmānyapāda, ch. 1–14 (vol. 1; "iti sāmānyapādaḥ prathamaḥ samāptaḥ", Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati Volume 1: Muktabodha e-text no. M00016, data-entered from the edition: editor gaṇapati śāstrī; bharatiya vidya prakāśan, Delhi, 1921; line number in that file: 5400): the basics of the teaching on sound and the mātṛkā (1, 3), mantraliṅga (4), the sādhanapaṭala (5), kuṇḍa and maṇḍala (6), sacrificial spoons (7), the daily rite (9), aṅkurārpaṇa (12), agnikalpa (14).

2. Mantrapāda, ch. 15–52 (vol. 2; “iti mantrapādo dvitīyaḥ samāptaḥ”, Muktabodha M00017, file line 14672): mantras and rites of individual deities — Gaṇapati (15–16), Vāgīśvarī (18), Tvaritā (22), the Nityās (23), the five Durgās (24), Sūrya (27) and others; then the “medical” and magic chapters — poisons (39–40), children’s diseases (41), graha and bhūta (42–43), epilepsy and madness (44), fevers (45), various diseases (46), saṃvanana (48), substances (50), victory in battle (52).
3. Kriyāpāda, 64 chapters (vol. 3 — ch. 1–30; vol. 4 — ch. 31–64). First (vol. 3) comes teaching and temple ritual: categories, upacāra, the extraction of mantras, mudrās, the marks of the sādhaka and the ācārya, the five-enclosure worship, agnikārya, samayadīkṣā, the six “paths” (ṣaḍadhvan). Then come architecture and iconometry — the gnomon, the plan of settlements, the choice of the site, vāstupūjā, the vimāna, gates, liṅgas, pedestals, the proportions of images; then pratiṣṭhā, festivals, snapana, the worship of Sūrya, Gaṇeśa, Skanda, Durgā, Gaurī, Vāgīśvarī, Śāstā, the Mātṛkās, Kṣetrapāla; funeral rites (62), expiations (63), the renewal of the temple (64) (colophons M00018, M00233).
4. Yogapāda, 3 chapters (vol. 4): “the marks of yoga” (1–2) and prāṇāyāma and the rest (3); “yogapādaḥ samāptaḥ” (Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati Volume 4: Muktabodha e-text no. M00233, data-entered from the edition: editor gaṇapati śāstrī; bharatiya vidya prakāśan, Delhi, 1922; line numbers in that file: 13832–14508).

- Connection with the Tantrasārasaṃgraha. According to Goudriaan, the Tantrasārasaṃgraha of Nārāyaṇa (Kerala, 15th–16th c.) from ch. XI onward is, “very probably”, a reworking of the Mantrapāda of the Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 128).
- Testimony on social practice (Sanderson 2009, p. 292). Sanderson quotes Kriyāpāda 16.67–68b on initiatory names: a brahmin gets one ending in -śiva, a kṣatriya and a vaiśya in -gaṇa and -deva, a śūdra in -muni.
- Date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the needed work is not accessible to the AI). There is no absolute date in my works (see Part III, no. 55).
- Postures: Sāmānyapāda 5.64–78 (sādhanapaṭala) — eleven postures with description and purpose; karaṇa in vol. 3; the Yogapāda; 17.21 (iconography). See Part IV, § 4.1.

56. Kriyākramadyotikā (Aghoraśiva)

- What it is. The most authoritative South Indian siddhānta ritual manual. Sanderson names it among the main late paddhatis on which the influence of the Somaśambhupaddhati is visible (Sanderson 2009, p. 65, n. 73).
- Author and date. Aghoraśiva completed the Kriyākramadyotikā in 1157 (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663); he “flourished in the middle of the twelfth century” (Goodall 2004, p. lviii). In the colophon of the electronic text he has a second name: “iti parameśvarāparanāmadheya śrīmadaghoraśivācārya viracitāyāṃ kriyākramadyotikāyāṃ nityakarmavidhis samāptaḥ” (translation: “thus in the Kriyākramadyotikā composed by the venerable Aghoraśivācārya, otherwise named Parameśvara, the rule of the daily rite is completed”, Muktabodha e-text no. M00126, data-entered from the edition: cidambaram, South India, 1927; line numbers in that file: 7288–7289).

- Edition. Muktabodha M00126: “Transcribed from a 1927 cidambaram edition in Grantha script supplied by Richard Davis”.
- Commentary. The commentary Prabhā enters the electronic text together with the main text: “śrīmannirmalamaṇiguruviracitā prabhākhyā kriyākramadyotikā vyākhyā” (translation: “the commentary to the Kriyākramadyotikā named Prabhā, composed by the venerable guru Nirmalamaṇi”, Muktabodha M00126, file lines 40–41).
- What it consists of (the vidhi headings in the electronic text). The main section is the daily rite (nityakarma) in strict order:
    - the contemplation of Śiva upon awakening, purification, tooth-cleaning;
    - ablutions of several kinds: with water, “kāpila”, “fiery” (with ash), mental and “divine”;
    - ācamana, sakalīkaraṇa, prāṇāyāma, sandhyāvandana;
    - the worship of Śiva’s throne (śivāsana), aṅganyāsa, offerings, mental ablution;
    - worship with one enclosure circle, flowers, naivedya, ārātrika, the dedication of japa;
    - the worship of one’s guru and the vidyāpīṭha, circumambulation and prostrations;
    - the daily fire rite, bali;
    - the conclusion of the pūjā, the worship of Caṇḍeśvara, the dismissal of the deities, the japa of the Aghora mantra (up to Muktabodha M00126, file line 6645).

  Then: the midday rites, the study of the Śivasaṃhitā, the taking of food, mendicancy (bhikṣāṭana) and samādhi for ascetics, the evening and night rules. Colophon “nityakarmavidhis samāptaḥ” (Muktabodha M00126, file line 7289).
- Other sections. Then come the fire rites — the pits, the saṃskāra of fire from “conception” to “birth”, homa (Muktabodha M00126, file lines 7695–8595); the festival of the pavitra cords (pavitrāropaṇa, up to line 9653 of file M00126) and the festival of the damana flower (up to line 9759 of file M00126).
- What is missing (the AI did not search beyond its sources). There is no information on manuscripts in my works.
- Postures: baddhavīrāsana while eating, with a quotation from the Suprabheda. See Part IV, § 4.2.

57. Somaśambhupaddhati-vyākhyā (Trilocanaśiva) (M00220)

- What it is. A commentary to the Somaśambhupaddhati (Kriyākāṇḍakramāvalī) of Somaśambhu. Somaśambhu wrote his paddhati “in the eleventh century, probably in 1073” (Sanderson 2009, p. 65). According to Sanderson, it was probably the most influential siddhānta paddhati: it was incorporated almost in its entirety into the Agnipurāṇa, and manuscripts have survived across the subcontinent — in Kashmir, in Nepal and in the south (Sanderson 2009, p. 65, n. 73).
- Author of the commentary. The internal colophons of the electronic text name the author directly: “iti trilocanaśivācāryaviracitāyāṃ kriyākāṇḍakramāvalīṭīkāyāṃ nityakarmavidhiḥ samāptaḥ” (translation: “thus in the commentary to the Kriyākāṇḍakramāvalī composed by Trilocanaśivācārya, the rule of the daily rite is completed”, Somaśambhupaddhativyākhyā: Muktabodha e-text no. M00220, data-entered from the manuscript: IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) transcript T0170; line numbers in that file: 2218–2219; likewise at lines 3291, 3396, 4283 of file M00220). This coincides with the attribution in the bibliography of Sanderson 2009 (“Somaśambhupaddhativyākhyā of Trilocanaśiva. IFP MS Transcripts 457 and 170”).
    - Note. The last colophon of the electronic text has something different: “… śrīmatsomaśambhupaddhatau vā spaṣṭabodhinī tryaṃbakaśambhuviracite caturdaśa ṭīkā samāptā” (Muktabodha M00220, file lines 5963–5964). It is corrupt, but, in my view, it mentions the commentary “Spaṣṭabodhinī” and the name Tryaṃbakaśambhu. How to explain this, I did not find out.
- Trilocanaśiva. A South Indian siddhāntin of the 12th c., whose line of preceptors goes back to Dharmaśambhu (Sanderson 2009, p. 110). His teacher Jñānaśiva is “almost a contemporary of Aghoraśiva” (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663).
- Introduction. It is damaged (it begins with a lacuna). The commentator names his grandfather, “known in the world as Sabhāpati by the name Sadāśiva”, who received initiation in the “Cola-maṇḍala”. Further: “sa mahābhāgyayogena mahādevamajījanat || so’pi labdhādhikāro’smāt abhūtsiddhāntapāragaḥ | īśānaśiva ityanyaddīkṣāyāmapi …” (translation: “He by great good fortune begot Mahādeva; and the latter, having received from him the right (adhikāra), became a knower of the siddhānta; [the name] Īśānaśiva is another [name of his], at initiation …”, Muktabodha M00220, file lines 29–32). A line of preceptors of the “Āmarda-āśrama” is also mentioned (Muktabodha M00220, file line 39). Note. The beginning is damaged, so I render the degrees of kinship as they stand in the text, without interpretation.
- Method. The commentator constantly quotes āgamas — the Svāyambhuva, Mṛgendra (Muktabodha M00220, file lines 48, 58) and others. He also refers to his own commentary on Brahmaśambhu (“brahmaśambhuṭīkāyām”, Muktabodha M00220, file lines 899, 1190).

- Size. Sections with colophons: the daily rite (up to line 2219 of file M00220), pavitra (up to line 3292 of file M00220), damanaka (up to line 3397 of file M00220), expiations (prāyaścitta, up to line 4284 of file M00220). Then the text continues up to line 5964 of file M00220. The manuscript is the IFP transcript T0170 (Muktabodha M00220).
- Postures: baddhavīrāsana while eating, with a quotation from the Kiraṇa; among the prohibitions while eating — autkuṭya ("squatting"). See Part IV, § 1.10, § 4.2.

58. Śivārcanacandrikā (ascribed to Appaya Dīkṣita)

- What it is. A manual of the private worship of Śiva "for oneself" (ātmārthapūjā). Muktabodha ascribes it to Appaya Dīkṣita (M00079). Edition: Śivāgama Siddhānta Paripālana Saṅgham, Devakottai, 1922 (header of M00079).
- The aim per the first stanzas (Śivārcanacandrikā: Muktabodha e-text no. M00079, data-entered from the edition: śivāgama siddhānta paripalana saṅgham, Devakottai, 1922; line numbers in that file: 42–46): "avaśyakāryaṃ śaivānāmātmārthaśivapūjanam" (translation: "The obligatory duty of Śaivas is the worship of Śiva for oneself"). Further: "tasmādātmārthayajanaṃ śambho raṃbikayā saha | saṃgṛhya darśayiṣyāmi sarvadivyāgamoddhṛtam" (translation: "Therefore, having collected, I will show the worship of Śambhu together with Ambikā for oneself, extracted from all the divine āgamas").
- The principle of selection (Muktabodha M00079, file lines 47–49): "divyāgamārthasāṅkaryamaikataṃtryānnadoṣakṛt | kintu pāśupatārthaṃ ca sāṅkaryaṃ teṣu doṣakṛt" (translation: "The mixing of the prescriptions of the divine āgamas is not a fault — because of their single teaching; but mixing with the Pāśupata [prescriptions] in them is a fault"). This concerns a liṅga installed by humans, not the "self-arisen" and similar ones.
- What it consists of (the "atha …" headings in the electronic text). There is no division into chapters with colophons; the order of the rite is this:
    - ablution (Muktabodha M00079, file line 128), sandhyā (Muktabodha M00079, file line 221), the application of ash and the tripuṇḍra (Muktabodha M00079, file lines 309, 393), sakalīkaraṇa (Muktabodha M00079, file line 497);
    - the worship of the gate-keepers (Muktabodha M00079, file line 555), the purification of the body (Muktabodha M00079, file line 697), the conch (Muktabodha M00079, file line 1038), pañcagavya and pañcāmṛta (Muktabodha M00079, file lines 1061, 1100), the water for bathing [the liṅga] (Muktabodha M00079, file line 1133), mantras (Muktabodha M00079, file line 1179), the purification of the liṅga (Muktabodha M00079, file line 1225);
    - the worship of Sadāśiva, whose body is composed of mantras (vidyādeha, Muktabodha M00079, file line 1660), the worship of the enclosures (āvaraṇa, Muktabodha M00079, file line 2377), naivedya (Muktabodha M00079, file line 2533) — with the question "with which face does Sadāśiva eat" (answer: "with the upper one", Muktabodha M00079, file line 2639);

    - the worship of the guru (Muktabodha M00079, file line 3270), the midday rites (Muktabodha M00079, file line 3449).

  End: "śivārcanācandrikā samāptā" (Muktabodha M00079, file line 4058).
- A same-titled work. Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 (p. 148) describes the Śivārcanacandrikā of Śrīnivāsa Bhaṭṭa (Vidyānandanātha) in 46 chapters — not only on Śiva but also on other deities of the "smārta" series. Note. Our electronic text does not resemble that description: it has no division into 46 chapters and is devoted only to the worship of Śiva. In my view, it is a different text, but this I did not check.
- What is missing (the text is not mentioned in the AI's sources; the AI did not search beyond its sources). There are no dates of Appaya Dīkṣita in my works.
- Postures: kukkuṭāsana at the nyāsa (Muktabodha M00079, file line 296). See Part IV, § 4.2.

59. Siddhāntasārapaddhati (Bhojadeva)

- What it is. An early siddhānta ritual manual ascribed to King Bhoja of Dhārā. Sanderson: "the Siddhāntasārapaddhati of Mahārājādhirāja Bhojadeva of Dhārā (r. c. 1018–1060)" (Sanderson 2009, p. 55). The Somaśambhupaddhati depends on it (Sanderson 2009, p. 56, n. 39).
- Muktabodha's assessment (M00531): "If the text was indeed compiled in the 11th century, then this is a rare example of an early śaiva liturgical manual".
- Manuscripts. Two palm-leaf manuscripts in Old Newari script: NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 1-1363 (1077/8) and NAK 5-743 (1111/2) (Sanderson 2009, bibliography). Our electronic text was made from NAK 5-743, microfilm B 28/19 (Muktabodha M00531). Muktabodha, however, calls the manuscript "undated".
- State of the text. The electronic text begins with a damaged place ("sc. 3)" and following, with lacuna marks). The beginning has apparently been lost.
- What it consists of (colophons "iti mahārājādhirāja śrībhojadeva viracitāyāṃ siddhāntasārapaddhatau … samāptaḥ"):
    1. the daily rite (nityakarmavidhi, Siddhāntasārapaddhati: Muktabodha e-text no. M00531, data-entered from the manuscript: NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 5-743/vi ‹zaivatantra› 203 Reel no: B 28/19; line number in that file: 741);
    2. samayadīkṣā (Muktabodha M00531, file line 983);
    3. initiation (dīkṣāvidhi, Muktabodha M00531, file line 1336);
    4. the consecration of the sādhaka (Muktabodha M00531, file line 1447);
    5. pavitraka (Muktabodha M00531, file line 2050);
    6. the installation [of the pedestal?] (pāda pratiṣṭhā, Muktabodha M00531, file line 2259; Note. the meaning of "pāda" here I did not check);

7. the installation of the liṅga (Muktabodha M00531, file line 2626);
8. renewal (jīrṇoddhāra, Muktabodha M00531, file lines 2850–2851).

After the last colophon stands a fragment of a date “samvat āla jyeṣṭha kṛṣṇa” and yet another excerpt of text.

- Postures: karaṇa (a parallel per Kafle); prāṇāyāma and sakalīkaraṇa in the daily rite. See Part IV, § 4.2, § 11.

E. Outside the scope (neither tantras nor āgamas) — parallels only

60. Pāśupatasūtra with Kauṇḍinya’s Pañcārthabhāṣya

- What it is. The basic text of the Pāśupatas — the oldest Śaiva ascetic tradition, of the “Atimārga”, outside the tantras and āgamas. The sūtras have come down together with the sole commentary — Kauṇḍinya’s “Pañcārthabhāṣya”.
- Edition. The GRETIL electronic text (input: Oliver Hellwig) from the edition: R. Anantakrishna Shastri, Trivandrum Sanskrit Series 143, 1940 (file header GRETIL file sa_pAzupatasUtra-comm).
- Date. The sūtras — “2nd century CE”, the bhāṣya — “4th century CE” (Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline). Törzsök: the date of Kauṇḍinya (hypothetically 4th c.) “has not been established with certainty” (Törzsök 1999, p. vii, n. 29).
- Structure. 5 chapters (adhyāya); by the GRETIL numbering they contain 44, 27, 26, 24 and 46 sūtras.
- The first sūtra: “athātaḥ paśupateḥ pāśupataṃ yogavidhiṃ vyākhyāsyāmaḥ” (translation: “Now we shall expound the Pāśupata rule of yoga [, issuing] from Paśupati”, Pāśupatasūtra 1.1).
- The “five subjects”. Kauṇḍinya reduces the teaching to five subjects, whence the commentary’s name: “kāryaṃ kāraṇaṃ yogo vidhir iti pañcaiva padārthāḥ samāsata uddiṣṭāḥ” (translation: “The effect, the cause, yoga, the rule [, and also the end of suffering] — these are the five subjects briefly indicated”, psbh 1.1). The fifth subject is the end of suffering (duḥkhānta), mentioned right there in the form “saduḥkhāntaḥ”.
- Content (characteristic prescriptions):
    - bathe with ash thrice a day (Pāśupatasūtra 1.2: “bhasmanā triṣavaṇaṃ snāyīta”);
    - worship [Śiva] with laughter, song, dance, the sound “ḍuṃḍuṃ”, prostration and japa (1.8);
    - wear a single garment or be naked (1.10–11);
    - not to initiate conversation with women and śūdras (1.13);
    - at the advanced stage — behave so that “other people consider [him] mad, stupid” (4.8: “unmatto mūḍha ityevaṃ manyante itare janāḥ”).

  The text ends with the sūtra “śivaḥ” (5.46). The closing colophon calls the treatise “śrīmadyogapāśupataśāstra” (psbh 5.46).

- Postures: to Pāśupatasūtra 1.16/17 Kauṇḍinya gives a list of postures: padmaka, svastika, upasthāñjalika, ardhacandra, pīṭhaka, daṇḍāyata, sarvatobhadra (psbh_1.16:10). Kafle has eight of them, Mallinson and Singleton — seven. See Part IV, § 7, § 11, § 14.

61. Tirumantiram (Tamil)

- What it is. A Tamil Śaiva text of Tirumūlar; not a Sanskrit tantra. It is included in the list as a parallel.
- Character according to Sanderson (Sanderson 2009, p. 287). The text used to be assigned to the 5th–7th c., but it interweaves Tamil Śaiva-siddhānta, Vedānta, the Śākta tradition with kuṇḍalinīyoga and the cult of Tripurā, and also the cult of Naṭarāja. Such a combination "is unlikely to predate the twelfth century". In Mallinson & Singleton 2017 (Timeline) the text is placed in the 14th c.
- Structure. The text is divided into "tantras" (tantiram). The postures are in the "third tantra" (மூன்றாம் தந்திரம்), in section 4, "ஆதனம்" ("āsana") (Tamil Wikisource). The total size and division I did not check (the AI did not search beyond its sources).
- What is missing (the AI did not search beyond its sources). There is no information on manuscripts in my works. The rest of the text's content I did not study, so the description is short.
- Postures: stanzas 558–563 — padma, bhadra, kukkuṭa, siṃha with descriptions; the list of the seven best postures: bhadra, gomukha, paṅkaja, kesari, sotthira, vīra, sukhāsana. The number "126" is the commentators' interpretation. Translation mine, conjectural in places. See Part IV, § 15.3.

62. Skandapurāṇa (early); Triśikhibrāhmaṇopaniṣad

- What it is. Both texts are drawn in only as parallels: Kafle refers to them in his commentary to the Niśvāsa. I have the electronic text of neither.
- Skandapurāṇa — manuscript. The early Skandapurāṇa (Ambikākhaṇḍa); the oldest manuscript was completed in 810 (NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 2-229, palm leaf, Licchavi script; Sanderson 2009, p. 51 and bibliography).
- Skandapurāṇa — date. Bakker allows that the Mūlasūtra (of the Niśvāsa) and the Skandapurāṇa took shape at about the same period (Kafle 2015, p. 32).
- Skandapurāṇa — editions: Bhaṭṭarāī, Kathmandu 1988; adhyāyas 1–25 — Adriaensen, Bakker, Isaacson 1998 (Sanderson 2009, bibliography).
- Triśikhibrāhmaṇopaniṣad. A yoga Upaniṣad. It is not mentioned in any of my eight works (the text is not mentioned in the AI's sources). It is known to me only from Kafle's reference, "The Triśikhibrāhmaṇopaniṣat 91–92 presents the same idea without saying that this practice is called karaṇa" (Kafle 2015, translation and commentary, n. 766).

- What is missing (the AI did not search beyond its sources; the needed work is not accessible to the AI). The content of both texts I did not study, so the description is reduced to bibliography.
- Postures: Skandapurāṇa 179.40cd — tālau jihvāṃ samādhāya dantair dantān na ca spṛśan (“having pressed the tongue to the palate and not touching the teeth with the teeth”, quoted per Kafle). See Part IV, § 11, § 14.

F. Needed but not yet verified at all

63. Raurava(āgama)

- What it is. One of the 28 siddhānta āgamas. Two different corpora have come down under this name (Goodall 2004, pp. xliv–xlvi):
  - the early Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha. It is the one quoted by early siddhānta authors, down to Aghoraśiva of the 12th c. and his pupils;
  - the late “kriyāpāda”, which the same authors do not quote.
- Goodall’s position: “the earliest now surviving Raurava is almost certainly the body of chapters transmitted to us of the Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha” (Goodall 2004, p. xlvi). Dagens and Barazer-Billoret (2000) consider the “kriyāpāda” more ancient; Goodall disputes them (Goodall 2004, pp. xliv–xlv).
- The late character of the “kriyāpāda” (Sanderson 2009, p. 287, n.). Sanderson adduces the Raurava, Kriyāpāda, paṭala 59 as an example of a late trait: in temple worship each mantra of Śiva, “from the first of the Brahmas to the last of the Weapons”, is provided with its own Śakti. The Raurava is also in the list of texts first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II (16th c.) (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662).
- Editions and manuscripts:
  - Rauravāgama, edition of N. R. Bhatt, 3 volumes, Publications de l’IFI (Institut français d’Indologie — the former name of the French Institute of Pondicherry) 18.1–3, Pondicherry, 1961, 1972, 1988; the Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha was published in vol. 1 (Sanderson 2009, bibliography).
  - For a significant part of the Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha the sole manuscript is the Mysore codex P 258 (Goodall 2004, p. xxxv).
- What is missing (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; initially overlooked by the AI, added later). I do not have the text itself: I have not read Bhatt’s edition on archive.org. Therefore the content of the chapters is not described here, and there is no information on postures. In Part I this text stands in the section “needed but not yet verified”.

Part III. Dating and manuscripts: what researchers write

Task: for each text where postures were found, show when it was composed, what researchers write about it (verbatim quotations with page references) and what manuscripts and editions exist. The numbering coincides with Part I.

Edition 2. Changes compared with the first: 1. Instead of Russian retellings, each foreign-language quotation is given an exact translation. 2. Where there is no dating, the true reason is indicated (see § 0.4). 3. Gaps have been corrected which in the first version arose because I (the AI) had searched my own sources incompletely (see § 0.5).

0. How this part is arranged

0.1. Rules

1. Every statement about a date is given as a verbatim quotation with author, work and page. The quotation is left in the original language (English or French). It is immediately followed by "Translation:" — my exact translation into English. There is no retelling. In the translation, omissions ("…") stand where they do in the quotation, and explanations in square brackets [ ] are mine.
2. My own remarks are marked "Note.". These are not datings but indications of discrepancies between sources, or that a source speaks of a different text with the same name.
3. Information on manuscripts is taken from the headers of the Muktabodha and GRETIL electronic texts (I quote them verbatim and translate) and from the descriptions of manuscripts in editions.
4. In quotations from Muktabodha headers I omit the service field labels between adjacent fields (e.g., "Description:" after the line "Manuscript: …"). The text of the fields themselves is given verbatim, including typos and transliteration such as "" (= śaivatantra).
5. The bibliographic descriptions of manuscripts from Sanderson 2009 are also translated. The sigla (NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) MS, NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms), etc.) are left as is.

0.3. The general framework: what can be dated at all

Almost all tantras are anonymous and pass themselves off as an eternal revelation, so their datings are as a rule relative. There are two reference points: quotations in dated authors and the dates of manuscripts. The key statements:

- Goodall (2004, p. xlvi): > "Concerning the chronology of the early scriptural sources of Tantric Śaivism we can do little more than assert for most of the texts known to us that they predate the citations that appear in the works of the earliest datable commentators, that is to say, in works of the tenth to early eleventh centuries from Kashmir or Mālava, and for a few of them, that they go back at least to the early ninth century since they survive in Nepalese manuscripts of that date…"

  Goodall here refers to Sanderson (SANDERSON 2002:2–11).

- Sanderson (2009, p. 50): > "it is clear in my view that the Svacchandatantra was redacted after the formation of the Saiddhāntika Niśvāsa corpus, the Tantrasadbhāva after the Svacchanda, the Kubjikāmata after the Tantrasadbhāva, the first hexad of the Jayadrathayāmala after the Kubjikāmata, and the remaining three hexads after the first."

The dated commentators on whom these reasonings rely:

- Abhinavagupta — "fl. c. 975–1025" (Sanderson 2009, p. 46);
- Kṣemarāja — "fl. c. 1000–1050" (Sanderson 2009, p. 54);
- Utpaladeva — "fl. c. 925–975" (Sanderson 2009, p. 64);

- Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha — “c. 925–975”, Rāmakaṇṭha II — “c. 950–1000” (Goodall 2004, p. lviii);
- Aghoraśiva — “completed his Kriyākramadyotikā in 1157” (Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663);
- Somaśambhu wrote his Paddhati “in the eleventh century, probably in 1073” (Sanderson 2009, p. 65).

0.4. Why many texts have no dating — the true reason

The label “no data” in the first version was inaccurate: it sounded as if no dating existed at all. In fact the reason is almost always in me — in the AI that prepared this file. Specifically:

- The AI did not search beyond the eight works of § 0.2. I did not go through manuscript catalogues (the NCC (New Catalogus Catalogorum — the consolidated catalogue of Sanskrit manuscripts, Madras), the Nepal Catalogue, the IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) catalogues), monographs and articles on individual texts, the introductions to editions (except Goodall 2004, Kafle 2015, Törzsök 1999, Bang 2018 and fragments of Bhatt 1982), or encyclopedic compendia (e.g., the Tāntrikābhidhānakośa). Therefore “no dating” in this file means only “none in those eight works”. Whether a dating exists anywhere in scholarly literature has not been established by me.
- the name does not occur in my works at all. This was checked by a software search across all eight texts, taking into account spelling variants and OCR (optical character recognition from the scan) errors.
- the name occurs, but the author gives no date. The pages are indicated in the relevant entries.
- the researcher himself refers to a work where the date is discussed, but the AI does not have that work. It is indicated which work it is and whether I tried to obtain it.
- The AI initially searched incompletely. In the first version I missed information that is present in my own sources. It has been added (§ 0.5). It is not excluded that similar omissions still remain: searching through OCR with recognition errors does not guarantee completeness.

0.5. What was omitted in the first version (initially overlooked by the AI, added later) and has now been added

No.	Text	What turned up in my own sources on re-checking
8, 9	Bṛhatkālottara, Ṣaṭsāhasrakālottara	Bang 2018, p. 64: Tantrasadbhāva 25.14–68 presumably borrows from them;

No.	Text	What turned up in my own sources on re-checking
		Bang 2018 gives the Bṛhatkālottara manuscript A 43-1 the date 1161 (Sanderson 2009 has 1169)
8, 25	Bṛhatkālottara, Piṅgalāmata	Bang 2018 (bibliography): the unpublished dissertation of Elizabeth Mills (Oxford) on the dating of early Śaiva texts; the AI does not have it (the needed work is not accessible to the AI)
9, 28	Kālottara (in general)	Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 38: “an undoubtedly old text”
10	Sarvajñānottara	Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 38, n. 27: the Nepalese manuscript “perhaps the ninth cent.”
20	Jayaratha	Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 60: “placed about 1200 A.D.”; Sanderson 2009, p. 221, n. 500: reference to SANDERSON 2007a

43	Sarvollāsa	Sanderson 2009, p. 241: Sarvānandanātha was born around the beginning of the 15th c. (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 — 16th c.)
45	Phetkāriṇī	Sanderson 2009, pp. 241–242: later than Śāśvatavajra (late 10th — early 11th c.); first mention in Sarvānandanātha
45	Bṛhannīla	Sanderson 2009, p. 242: a mention (no date)
46	Vārāhī	Muktabodha M00317: the connection with Kāmarūpa; quoted in the Sarvollāsa and others
48	Hāhārāva	Muktabodha M00283: probably of Nepalese origin (the Guhyakālī cult); Sanderson 2009, p. 191, n. 460: the name “Hāhārāvottara”

No.	Text	What turned up in my own sources on re-checking in the Yoginīsaṃcāra list (no date; identity not established)
49	Kriyoḍḍīśa	Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 120 (not only the index, as I wrote earlier): one of the versions of the Uḍḍīśa group, editions of 1924 and 1967
51	Kulānandādi	Muktabodha M00284: “indeed an early Kaula work”
55	Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati	Bang 2018, p. 362: “the late Saiddhāntika ritual manual”
58	Śivārcanacandrikā	Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 148: a same-titled work by another author (Śrīnivāsa Bhaṭṭa) is described
59	Siddhāntasārapaddhati	Muktabodha M00531: “If the text was indeed compiled in the 11th century…”

A. Early Śaiva tantras, Trika and Kaula

1. Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā — Nayasūtra

Dating.

- Goodall et al. 2015 (I do not have the volume itself; quoting from Kafle 2015, p. 32): > “…begins, we think, with the Mūlasūtra (c. 450–550 AD) and is completed with the Niśvāsamukha and Guhyasūtra probably by the end of the seventh century.”
- Relative order of the parts, Goodall et al. 2015:22 (from Kafle 2015, p. 32): > “We are therefore confident that the Mūlasūtra was followed by the Uttarasūtra, which was followed by the Nayasūtra, which was in turn followed by the Guhyasūtra, exactly the order in which those works are transmitted in the manuscript."

- Bakker 2014 (from Kafle 2015, p. 32): > "Bakker (2014:9), however, without yet having seen Goodall et al.'s completed edition, has expressed doubts about this dating of the Mūlasūtra, and instead places it a century later."

- Sanderson (Sanderson 2009, p. 254, n. 591): > "the corpus of Niśvāsa texts found in the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā codex, the earliest of which, the Mūlasūtra, was probably composed at some time between 450 and 550, for which dating see the conclusions of a recent workshop on this text summarized in the newsletter of the Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project (GOODALL and ISAACSON 2007)."

  In the same work, p. 45: the Siddhānta "emerged out of the Atimārga from about the fifth century onwards, first in the corpus of Niśvāsa scriptures".

- Goudriaan (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 34) dated the manuscript itself: > "which has probably been written, in our own opinion, not much earlier or later than A.D. 900."

  In n. 7 in the same place he adds that H.P. Shastri, Farquhar and Bagchi assigned the manuscript to the 8th c., and answers: "This seems too early".

Manuscripts.

- The only old manuscript — Kafle 2015, p. 92: > "The principal source … is a palm-leaf manuscript transmitting the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā, N, preserved in the National Archives, Kathmandu (NAK). The Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project (NGMPP) reel number is A 41/14, the NAK accession number is 1-277 … The manuscript consists of 114 folios written in the Nepalese ``Licchavi'' script."

  In the same place, on the date of the manuscript: > "Goodall et al. (2015:108) after a long discussion based on comparison with other early Nepalese manuscripts, proposes the date of the manuscript to 850–900 AD, which is also the date proposed by Sanderson (2006:152). We, however, feel that the lower date of the manuscript is a little early. On the grounds of palaeography, the date of the Niśvāsa manuscript probably falls after the date of the manuscript of the Nepalese Suśrutasaṃhitā which is dated to 878 AD."

  Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): "Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā. NAK MS 1-277: palm-leaf; Newari script; undated; probably second half of the ninth century."

- Apographs (Kafle 2015, pp. 92–93):
  - W — Wellcome Institute, Sanskrit manuscript I.33, dated 1912;
  - K — NAK 5-2406, NGMPP A 159/18, dated 1925;

    - T — the Tucci collection, 3:7:1, undated.
- Edition: Goodall et al. 2015 (Collection Indologie 128). I do not have this volume (the needed work is not accessible to the AI): the AI did not obtain the text of the book. The Sanskrit of Nayasūtra 4.14–15 and 4.105 I quote through Kafle.

2. Niśvāsamukha

Dating. The main source is Kafle 2015, the edition of this text.

- p. 31: > “The dating of the Niśvāsamukha remains an open question. The sole manuscript of the Niśvāsa we have is from 9th-century Nepal. … This provides us with the terminus ante quem.”

- p. 34 — the final conclusion: > “In the final end, we agree on the proposition of Goodall et al. (2015:35) that the Niśvāsamukha was redacted before the eighth century, probably sometime during the 7th-century. The precise date of the text, however, still needs further investigation.”

- p. 33 — relative anchors: > “Niśvāsamukha 4:70c–88 paraphrases the Pāśupatasūtra. The latter text, therefore, certainly precedes the former.”

  And about the Svacchanda: “it is evident that the Niśvāsamukha is earlier than the Svacchandatantra”.

- Goodall et al. 2015:22, from Kafle 2015, p. 34 — on the place of the Niśvāsamukha within the corpus: > “Being professedly an introduction, it presupposes the existence of at least one sūtra for it to introduce…”

Manuscripts. The same NAK 1-277 (A 41/14) and its apographs (see no. 1). Edition: Kafle 2015 (verses 4.49cd–51 were collated against his scans).

3. Svacchandatantra with the Uddyota of Kṣemarāja

Dating.

- Sanderson (Sanderson 2009, p. 50): the Svacchanda “was redacted after the formation of the Saiddhāntika Niśvāsa corpus” (full quotation in § 0.3).
- Kafle (Kafle 2015, p. 33), relying on him: > “It is likely that the Svacchandatantra was redacted after the Niśvāsa corpus, for the former borrows a large amount of text from the latter (see Sanderson 2006:160ff.). … Since the date of the Svacchandatantra is an open question, the exact dating of the Niśvāsamukha remains a complicated issue.”
- Terminus ante quem — the commentator Kṣemarāja, “fl. c. 1000–1050” (Sanderson 2009, p. 54).
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 31: the Svacchanda, Mālinīvijaya and Netra are named the chief “Āgamaśāstra” for Kashmiri Śaivas “in the last centuries of the first millennium A. D.”

- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: the Svacchanda stands in the group "6th–10th century CE: Early Tantras".
- Why there is no absolute date: Kafle directly calls it an "open question". The work Sanderson 2006, to which he refers, is not in the AI's possession (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it).

Manuscripts and editions.

- Muktabodha M00091: > "The e-text was converted from devanagari typesetting files prepared by Dr. S. Malaviya … The photographic facsimiles are from the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies volumes 31, 38, 44, 48, 51, 53, and 56."

- GRETIL sa_svacchandatantra: entered from the KSTS (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar) and Dvivedī editions, "Input by members of the Saiva reading group at the EFEO in Pondicherry 2004 (Dominic Goodall, Mei Yang, Nibedita Rout, R. Sathyanarayanan, S.A.S. Sarma)".

- The manuscripts against which Sanderson emends the text (Sanderson 2009, p. 64, n. 70; p. 260, n. 611):

    - "Svacchandalalitabhairava IFI T. 507";
    - "NAK MS 1–224".

    In the bibliography of Sanderson 2009: "Svacchandalalitabhairavatantra. NAK MS 1–224, NGMPP B28/18: palm-leaf; Newari script; A.D. 1067/8. ——. IFP MS Transcript 507, pp. 1–356."

    On p. 260 he notes that his version "agrees with that of the Svacchandatantra as transmitted in Nepalese and Grantha manuscripts. Thus NAK MS 1-224…".

4. Mālinīvijayottaratantra

Dating.

- Törzsök (Törzsök 1999, p. vii): > "Since the Mālinīvijayottara was probably known to the Saiddhāntika Sadyojyotis, who probably predates Somānanda (fl. c. 900–950 CE) considerably, it may be presumed that the Mālinīvijayottara was composed before 800. The only terminus ante quem we can establish is this date…"

    In n. 28 in the same place: > "Sadyojyotis's date may be pushed back as far as around 700 or possibly even earlier; and thus the Mālinīvijayottara can perhaps be dated before that date."

- Törzsök (1999, p. vi) on the text being later than the Siddhayogeśvarīmata: > "The Siddhayogeśvarīmata must precede the Mālinīvijayottara … since the Mālinīvijayottara itself states that it derives from the Siddhayogeśvarīmata."

- Sanderson (Sanderson 2009, p. 46): the Mālinīvijayottaratantra is “the scripture taken as the foundation of the Trika variant of Śākta Śaivism expounded in the Tantrāloka of the great Kashmirian Śaiva Abhinavagupta (fl. c. 975–1025)”.

- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: “6th–10th century CE”.

Manuscripts and editions.

- Muktabodha M00160: “Photographed from volume 37 of the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies. The corrections listed in the printed edition have been made directly to the text.”
- GRETIL: “Adhikaras 1-4, 7, 11-17 based on the critical edition by Somadeva Vasudeva, Wolfson College, Oxford, July 2000 (critical apparatus not included) (also publ. Pondichery c2004, Collection indologie, 97). Adhikaras 5, 6, 8-10, 18-23 based on the ed. by Madhusudan Kaul Shastri, Bombay 1922 (Kashmir series of texts and studies ; 37)”.
- Why there is no description of the manuscripts: it is in the introduction to the Vasudeva 2004 edition (CI 97), but this book is not in the AI’s possession (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it). In my eight works the manuscripts of the Mālinīvijayottaratantra are not described (the AI did not search beyond its sources).

5. Kubjikāmatatantra

Dating.

- Sanderson (Sanderson 2009, p. 50): “the Kubjikāmata after the Tantrasadbhāva, the first hexad of the Jayadrathayāmala after the Kubjikāmata”.

- Goudriaan (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 52): > “The basic version (KMT) seems to be that of about 3500 ślokas; it exists in several manuscripts and has been considered one of the oldest Tantras.”

  In n. 82 to this passage: > “FARQUHAR, RLI, p. 199; 354, following H.P. Śāstrī. This dating rests on false grounds; cf. VAN KOOIJ, Guptahandschrift.”

- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: “6th–10th century CE”.

- Why there is no absolute date: my works give only a relative one (Sanderson). The works of van Kooij and the Goudriaan–Schoterman 1988 edition are not in the AI’s possession (the needed works are not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain them).

Manuscripts.

- A dated manuscript. Sanderson 2009, p. 87, n. 154, among colophons of the reign of King Rāmapāla: “colophon of Kubjikāmata, NAK MS 1-1633, NGMPP B25/22 (transcribed in GOUDRIAAN and SCHOTERMAN 1988, p. 6)". The years of Rāmapāla's reign in the same place: "r. c. 1072–1126".

- GRETIL sa_kubjikamatatantra: "Based on the edition by T. Goudriaan and J. A. Schoterman: The Kubjikamatatantra: Kulalikamnaya version. Leiden: Brill 1988 (Orientalia Rheno-traiectina; 30). Input by Somadeva Vasudeva 1998–2000".

6. Netratantra with the commentary of Kṣemarāja

Dating.

- Sanderson (Sanderson 2009, p. 273, n. 650): "The purpose, date, and provenance of the Netratantra are the subject of SANDERSON 2005b". This is the article "Religion and the State: Śaiva Officiants in the Territory of the Brahmanical Royal Chaplain with an Appendix on the Provenance and Date of the Netratantra", IIJ 47 (2004), pp. 229–300 (Sanderson 2009, p. 342).

  Why Sanderson's conclusion on the date is not given here (the needed work is not accessible to the AI): the AI does not have the article, and I did not try to obtain it. Therefore I do not cite its conclusion.
- Terminus ante quem — Kṣemarāja, "fl. c. 1000–1050" (Sanderson 2009, p. 54).
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 31: the Netra is one of the chief authorities of Kashmiri Śaivas "in the last centuries of the first millennium A. D."
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: "6th–10th century CE".

Manuscripts and editions.

- Muktabodha M00038: "His files were based on the edition of the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies volumes 46 and 61 … The photographic facsimiles are of volumes 46 and 61 of the KSTS series."

  Note. In the bibliography of Sanderson 2009 the volumes given are KSTS 46 and 59.
- The manuscript under the name Amṛteśa (see also no. 27):
  - Muktabodha M00504 ("Uniform title: amṛteśatantra; Secondary title: netratantra"): "Manuscript: NGMCP manuscript no. pra-285 Reel B25/4. From a manuscript dated Nepal samvat 320 i.e. 1101 C.E."
  - Goudriaan (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 33): "the Amṛteśatantra, under which title a Ms. of 1200 A. D. appears in the Nepal Catalogue, is nothing else than the Netratantra". In n. 5: "Ms. dated N.E. 320".

  Note. Both sources give the same date, Nepāla saṃvat 320, but convert it into different years: 1101 (Muktabodha) and 1200 (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981). I do not resolve this dispute. Whether Goudriaan's manuscript coincides with manuscript M00504, I have not checked.

7. Mṛgendra(tantra) with the vṛtti of Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha

Dating.

- Goodall (Goodall 2004, p. xliv) places the Mṛgendra among the later of the early Siddhānta tantras: “the Parākhya, like the Kiraṇa and the later, still more śāstric Mataṅga and Mṛgendra, is evidently trying to present and defend a reasoned, consistent world view”.
- Goodall 2004, p. xliii: the term pañcakṛtya is not attested “in other early Siddhāntas with the exception of the (also relatively late) Mṛgendravidyāpāda (3:8d)”.
- Goodall 2004, pp. lvi–lvii — a revision of his own dating: > “I … suggested tentatively that, since the undated early Saiddhāntika writer Sadyojyotis appears to have been aware only of a Vedāntic pariṇāmavāda, it is conceivable that both the Parākhya and the Mṛgendra post-date him. This now seems to me to have been premature…”
- Terminus ante quem:
    - the Mṛgendra is commented on by Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha, whom Goodall dates “(very approximately) to c. 925–975” (Goodall 2004, p. lviii);
    - Goodall (Goodall 2004, p. xxxvii) directly refers to “Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha … ad Mṛgendravidyāpāda 2:7”.
- Sanderson 2009, p. 45: the Mṛgendra is listed among the “notable” Siddhānta scriptures that appeared after the Niśvāsa corpus.
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: “6th–10th century CE”.

Manuscripts and editions.

- GRETIL sa_mRgendrAgama: “Based on the edition by Madhusudan Kaul Shastri, Bombay (Srinagar): Nirnayasagara Press, 1930 (Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, 50). Input by Dominic Goodall. The text is not proofread.” The Kriyā- and Caryāpāda are from the edition of N.R. Bhatt (PIFI (Publications de l’Institut français d’Indologie, Pondicherry) 23, 1962; cf. the bibliography of Sanderson 2009).
- Muktabodha M00037: “Transcribed from vol. 12 of the Devakottai series with provisional corrections by Mark S. G. Dyczkowski. Photographic facsimiles from vol. 12 of the Devakottai series and from vol 50 of the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies.”
- The Mysore codex (Goodall 2004, pp. xcvi–xcvii): the same codex that contains the Parākhya includes “the Mṛgendrottara [= Mṛgendra] (ff. 23v–27r)”. In the same place: “The manuscript in fact transmits only the vidyāpāda and the yogapāda”.

8. Bṛhatkālottara

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 45: the Bṛhatkālottara is named among the Siddhānta scriptures that appeared after the Niśvāsa: “the Kālottara in a number of redactions, the Kiraṇa, the Parākhya, the Mṛgendra, the Bṛhatkālottara…”.

- Goodall 2004, p. xxxviii: > “Our Parākhya does not, however, appear to be the same as that quoted in the Bṛhatkālottara.”

  Goodall 2004, p. xxxix: “it is possible then that the Bṛhatkālottara knew another Parākhya”.

- Bang 2018, pp. 63–64 — a relative anchor (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later). On p. 63 Bang introduces a table thus: “The following table shows parallel passages from other sources that have presumably been adopted by the Tantrasadbhāva”. In the table on p. 64 (“List of verses of the Tantrasadbhāva borrowed from other Śaiva sources”) there is the line: “25.14-68 — Bṛhatkālottara (A 43-1)/ Ṣaṭsahasrakālottara (T0767)”.

  Note. It follows that Bang considers the text of these Kālottara passages to be probably older than the Tantrasadbhāva, which she herself dates to the 8th–9th c. (no. 22). The dating of the Bṛhatkālottara as such she does not discuss here. The chronological conclusion is mine, not her direct statement.
- Why there is no absolute date: there is none in my eight works (the AI did not search beyond its sources; the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information). Goodall 2004 (p. xxxviii, n. 54) refers to a more detailed analysis of one section of the Bṛhatkālottara (the canon lists) in Goodall 1998:414–417. Whether there is a dating there I do not know: this book is not in the AI’s possession (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it). Besides, the dating of the Bṛhatkālottara on the basis of the temple material is the subject of the unpublished dissertation of Elizabeth Mills (Oxford 2010; in the bibliography of Bang 2018 it is dated 2011; full title under no. 25). The AI does not have it either (the needed work is not accessible to the AI).

Manuscripts.

- Muktabodha E00012: “Manuscript: NGMPP Reel No. B 29/59 Manuscript No. pra - 89 … A version of the Kālottara called Bṛhadkālottara - the Great Kālottara, so called because of it size. Called Mahātantra in the collophon”.
- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Bṛhatkālottara. A = NAK MS 1-89, NGMPP B24/59: palm-leaf; Newari script; undated; B = NAK MS 4-131, NGMPP A43/1: palm-leaf; Pāla script; A.D. 1169.”
- Goodall 2004, p. xxxviii, n. 55: “Bṛhatkālottara, National Archives of Kathmandu 1-89, NGMPP reel no. B 24/59, ‘Kālottara’, ff. 47v–55r”.
- Bang 2018 (bibliography; added in edition 2): “Bṛhatkālottara NGMPP A 43-1, palm-leaf; Pāla script, 1161 CE; e-text provided by Muktabodha Indological Research Institute”.

Note. * The reel number in Muktabodha (B 29/59) disagrees with the number in Sanderson and Goodall (B24/59). The number of the manuscript itself is everywhere “1-89 / pra-89”, so probably the same manuscript is meant; that is my guess. * The manuscript on reel A43/1 Sanderson dates to 1169, Bang to 1161. I do not resolve the discrepancy.

9. Ṣaṭsāhasrakālottara

Dating.

- Bang 2018, p. 64 (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): Tantrasadbhāva 25.14–68 is included in the list of passages “presumably … adopted” with the source “Bṛhatkālottara (A 43-1)/ Ṣaṭsahasrakālottara (T0767)” (see no. 8 in full). The transcript T0767 is the very one from which our electronic text M00249 was made.

  Note. This gives only a relative anchor: Bang considers these passages a source of the Tantrasadbhāva (8th–9th c. by Bang). This is my conclusion from her table, not her direct statement about the date of the Ṣaṭsāhasrakālottara.
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 38 (on the Kālottara in general; added in edition 2): > “This is the place to refer to the Kālottaratantra, an undoubtedly old text which has often been quoted by Tantric authorities. There are several recensions; two of these, 1300 and 700 ślokas respectively, preserved in Nepalese manuscripts.”

  Goudriaan does not speak here about the Ṣaṭsāhasra recension.
- Why there is no absolute date (the AI did not search beyond its sources; the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information): Sanderson 2009 (p. 295) and Goodall 2004 (p. xcvi, n. 151) list other Kālottara recensions but do not discuss the Ṣaṭsāhasra recension. The list of recensions in Bhatt (introduction to the Sārdhatriśatikālottara, PIFI 61, p. xlviii), to which Goodall refers, is not in the AI’s possession (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it).

Manuscripts: * Muktabodha M00249: “Manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0767. Copied from a MS belonging to the French Institute of Pondicherry, No. RE 20294.” * Bang 2018 (bibliography): “Ṣaṭsāhasrakālottarāgama IFP T.767.”

10. Sarvajñānottara

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 45: in the list of scriptures that appeared after the Niśvāsa.
- Sanderson 2009, p. 303: “An intermediate stage in this development is probably to be recognized in the Sarvajñānottara and the Svāyambhuvasūtrasaṃgraha, which teach a cremation ritual for initiates but make no mention of Śrāddha rituals."

- Goodall 2004, p. lvi, n. 93: "The Sarvajñānottara, as is well known (see, e.g., SANDERSON 1992:291), is exceptional among the early Siddhāntas for upholding rather than refuting a non-dualist position".
- Goodall 2004, p. xlviii: among the "most other surviving early Siddhāntas (Niśvāsa, Pārameśvara, Kiraṇa, Sārdhatriśatikālottara, Sarvajñānottara, etc.)".
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 38 (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): > "The Sarvajñānottaratantra is without doubt one of the earliest preserved Śaivatantras."

  N. 27 in the same place — on the Nepalese manuscript: > "Nepal Cat., I, p. LXXIVf. and 85f. The Ms. is very old, but incomplete; it may be provisionally put into the same period as that of the NTS or a little earlier, perhaps the ninth cent. A.D."

  [NTS = Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā.]
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: "6th–10th century CE".

Manuscripts and editions.

- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): "Sarvajñānottara. A = NAK MS 1–1692, NGMPP A43/12: palm-leaf; Licchavi script; incomplete; B = IFP MS Transcript 334."
- Muktabodha M00327: "Manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T00334 from D5550 GOML, Madras". This is Sanderson's transcript B.
- Goodall 2004, p. lvi, n. 93 — the editions and manuscripts used by Goodall: "Tanjore edition [ET]; … Devakottai edition [ED]; … Adyar edition [EA]; Nepalese MS f.52v … [N1]; IFP MS 47818". By the "Adyar edition" Goodall means the edition in the Adyar Library Bulletin (Kunjunni Raja).

11. Niśvāsakārikā

Dating.

- Goodall 2015 (from Bang 2018, p. 82): > "Goodall 2015 assumes that the Niśvāsakārikā is later than the old corpus of the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā, and that its composition might belong to the same period as the final lines of the Guhyasūtra of the Niśvāsa, in other words to the seventh century."
- Bang 2018, p. 82 — a relative anchor: "The attestation of passages of the Niśvāsakārikā in chapters 1 and 9 of the Tantrasadbhāva is further evidence of the date of the composition of the Tantrasadbhāva." Hence the Niśvāsakārikā is older than the Tantrasadbhāva.

Manuscripts.

- Muktabodha M00251: “Manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0017A … which is copied from a manuscript belonging to M. K. S. Bhattar, madurai. It consists of pages up to 635 (the rest of the manuscript is in transcript t0017-b”.
- Muktabodha M00280 (a duplicate): “IFP Transcript T0017A which is the first part of the nisvāsakārikā. The remainder is on transcript T0017B”.
- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Niśvāsakārikā. IFP MS Transcript 17.”
- Goodall 2004, p. lvi, n. 93 refers to “Niśvāsakārikā, IFP MSS T.17, p. 232 and T. 127, p. 286”. Hence a transcript T.127 also exists.

12. Dīkṣottara

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 302, n. 717: funerary rituals are absent from the early Niśvāsa corpus, “appearing only in the Dīkṣottara, which was added to that corpus at a later date”.
- Bang 2018, p. 82: “nineteen chapters of the Dīkṣottara of the Niśvāsakārikā might have been an addition tagged on to the Niśvāsakārikā”.
- Why there is no absolute date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information): both authors speak only of the relative order; they give no absolute date.

Manuscripts. * Muktabodha M00279: “Manuscript: IFP Transcript T0017B from page 795 to end … The Dīkṣottara of the Nisvāsakārika which is the fifth section of the Niśvāsatattva saṃjitā. An important early Agama of the śaivasiddhānta.”

> Note. Muktabodha calls the Dīkṣottara the “fifth section” of the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā, while Sanderson and Bang call it a later addition.

13. Kiraṇa, ch. 58 (Yogapāda 1)

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography) — a dated manuscript: “Kiraṇa. NAK MS 5-893, NGMPP A40/3 (= Kiraṇatantra, Kiraṇāgama): palm-leaf; Licchavi script; incomplete; A.D. 924.” Therefore the text is not later than 924.
- Goodall 2004, p. xxxvii: the Kiraṇa is in “the tiny list of surviving demonstrably early listed Siddhāntas — the Kiraṇa, the Niśvāsa, the Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha, the Svāyambhuvasūtrasaṃgraha, the [Pauṣkara-] Pārameśvara”.
- Goodall 2004, p. xliv: the Kiraṇa precedes “the later, still more śāstric Mataṅga and Mṛgendra”.
- Goodall 2004, p. lv: Parākhya 4:151 ff. reworks the Kiraṇa, so the Kiraṇa is older than the Parākhya: “Here numerous verses echo in their formulation the treatment of the same ideas in the Kiraṇa.”

- Sanderson 2009, p. 254: “The category of exonerated initiates appears later in the Kiraṇa, the Pārameśvara, and the Svacchanda”. That is, later than the Niśvāsa corpus.
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: “6th–10th century CE”.
- Why there is no more precise date: by the references in Goodall 2004 it should be sought in Goodall 1998 (the introduction to the Kiraṇavṛtti), but this book is not in the AI’s possession (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it).

Manuscripts.

- IFP transcripts against which ch. 58 was collated: T0998 and T0746 (manuscript).

- The Mysore codex (Goodall 2004, p. xcvi): > “The Parākhya is followed in the same codex by the chapters 1–11 and 58–9 (the last two being numbered 59 and 60 respectively) of the Kiraṇa”.

  Goodall 2004, p. xxxvi: “the codex’s text of the Kiraṇa is the closest among those of all the manuscripts known to me to the text that Rāmakaṇṭha had before him”.

- GRETIL sa_kiraNatantra1-6 (only ch. 1–6 with Rāmakaṇṭha’s commentary): “Based on the ed. by Dominic Goodall: Bhaṭṭa Rāmakaṇṭha’s Commentary on the Kiraṇatantra, Vol. I, chapters 1–6 critical edition and annotated translation. Pondicherry: IFP/EFEO, 1998 (Publications du département d’indologie, 86.1)”.

14. Mataṅgapārameśvara, Yogapāda

Dating.

- Goodall (Goodall 2004, p. xliv): the Mataṅga and Mṛgendra are called “the later, still more śāstric” in comparison with the Kiraṇa.

- Goodall 2004, p. xlix, n. 68 — the lower limit via the Buddhist logician Dignāga: > “SANDERSON (2002:16) has pointed out a couple of other echoes of non-Śaiva śāstric texts in the Mataṅga: Sāṅkhyakārikā 62 is paraphrased in vidyāpāda 6:63c–64b and Dignāga’s definition of pratyakṣa (pratyakṣaṃ kalpanāpoḍham) given in the pratyakṣapariccheda of the Pramāṇasamuccaya is alluded to in Mataṅgayogapāda 4:15c–16a…”

  [Dignāga’s definition of pratyakṣa [perception]: pratyakṣaṃ kalpanāpoḍham — “perception is free from conceptual construction”.]

- Goodall 2004, p. liii: the Mataṅga, the southern Pauṣkara and the Pauṣkara quoted by Jñānaśambhu “see themselves as redactions of the Pārameśvara division of scripture”.

- Terminus ante quem — the commentator Rāmakaṇṭha II, “c. 950–1000” (Goodall 2004, p. lviii).
- Sanderson 2009, p. 45: the Mataṅgapārameśvara is in the list of scriptures that appeared after the Niśvāsa.
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: “6th–10th century CE”.
- Why there is no absolute date: my works give only the limits “after Dignāga” and “before Rāmakaṇṭha II”. The work Sanderson 2002, to which Goodall refers, is not in the AI’s possession (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it). Bhatt’s introduction (Bhatt 1982) I recognized only partially (pp. v, xx, lxxvi–lxxviii); its remaining pages have not been checked (the AI did not search beyond its sources).

Manuscripts and editions.

- Edition: Bhatt 1977 (Vidyāpāda, PIFI (Publications de l’Institut français d’Indologie, Pondicherry) 56) and 1982 (Kriyā-, Yoga-, Caryāpāda, PIFI 65); cf. the bibliography of Sanderson 2009. Yogapāda 2.10–29 was collated against the scans of PIFI 65, pp. 253–256.
- Bhatt 1982, p. v — on Rāmakaṇṭha’s commentary: > “Ce commentaire tel que nous l’avons retrouvé (dans deux manuscrits originaires du Cachemire) est certainement incomplet”.

  Translation: “This commentary in the form in which we found it (in two manuscripts of Kashmiri origin) is certainly incomplete”.

  The commentary reaches kriyāpāda 11.13.
- Bhatt 1982, pp. lxxvii–lxxviii, “Manuscrits utilisés dans la présente édition” (“Manuscripts used in the present edition”; the sigla are illegible in the OCR, so I give the descriptions):

15. Parākhya(tantra)

Dating. The main source is Goodall 2004, the edition of this text.

- p. lviii — the conclusion: > “Nevertheless, it seems to me probable that the Parākhya is among the latest (if not itself the latest) of the demonstrably early (i.e. pre-tenth-century because known to the Kashmirian commentators of the lineage of Rāmakaṇṭha II) listed Siddhāntas to survive. The earliest quotations from the Parākhya are probably those of Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha, whom we may date (very approximately) to c. 925–975 … and thus it must have been written before the tenth century.”
- p. lviii — on Ratnākara’s Haravijaya: > “SANDERSON (2002:5–6, fn. 3) has pointed out that it is conceivable that the Parākhya was alluded to in c. 830 AD in Ratnākara’s Haravijaya … We may conclude that the Parākhya may have been composed in the eighth or ninth century AD.”

    p. xlvii — the lower limit: “we can plainly discern the influence upon it of thinkers of the seventh century”. On pp. xlix–l Goodall points to echoes of Dharmakīrti (Parākhya 6:49cd ~ Pramāṇavārttika 1:320ab) and Kumārila.
    p. xliv: “the Parākhya is probably the latest or one of the latest of the surviving listed pre-tenth-century tantras of the Saiddhāntika canon”.

Manuscripts.

- Goodall 2004, p. xxxv: > “there seems to survive only one incomplete manuscript of the text, transmitting paṭalas 1–6 and 14–15.”

  In n. 48: two other Mysore copies, “MSS B 785 and B 811, transcripts on paper in Kannada script … are apographs of MY [the Mysore manuscript]”.

- Goodall 2004, p. xcv: > “The principal source for the text is University of Mysore, Oriental Research Institute MS P 258/9 (i.e. MS P 258, ff. 27v–35v). … Palm-leaf (talipot). Nandināgarī.”

- Edition: Goodall 2004. Chapter 14 (yoga) occupies pp. 109–122 there (Sanskrit) and 347–386 (translation), according to the table of contents.

16. Vijñānabhairava

Dating.

- Goudriaan (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 40), on the antiquity of the yāmala genre: “the type of a Yāmala must be very old; the Vijñānabhairavatantra already considers itself to be an appendix to the Rudrayāmala”.
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 47: “the first instance is perhaps furnished by the Parātriṃśikā and its example was followed by the Vijñānabhairava which calls itself”Rudrayāmalīya”“.
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: the Vijñānabhairava is placed in the “10th century CE”.
- Why there are no other datings (the AI did not search beyond its sources; the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information). In Sanderson 2009 (p. 48, n.) the name Vijñānabhairava occurs only in a list of the “Tantras of the Eight Bhairavas” from another text; there is nothing there about the date of our text. Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 and Bang 2018 have no other information on the date. Special literature on the Vijñānabhairava was not searched by the AI.

Manuscripts and editions. GRETIL sa_vijJAnabhairava: “Encoded by: Dott. Marino Faliero. Date: July 1998”. The edition is not indicated in the header. In Bang 2018 (bibliography): “Vijñānabhairava with the commentary (-uddyota) of Kṣemarāja on vv. 1-23 and the commentary (-vivṛti) of Śivopādhyāya on the rest, ed. Mukund Ram Sastri.

KSTS 8. Bombay, 1918.” There are no manuscript descriptions in my works (the AI did not search beyond its sources).

17. Uḍḍāmareśvaratantra

Dating.

- Why there is no dating (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources). The name occurs only in Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 119–120, and Goudriaan gives no date there. The name does not occur in Sanderson 2009, Goodall 2004, Kafle 2015, Törzsök 1999, Bang 2018 or Mallinson & Singleton 2017. Other literature was not searched by the AI.
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 119 — on the general group of texts: > “A difficult case for philologists is the Uḍḍīśatantra, a typical instance of a treatise of magic of the inferior kind, but nevertheless enjoying a great popularity all over India. The text also appears under other titles, especially Rāvaṇoḍḍīśa or Vīrabhadratantra; sometimes Uḍḍāmaratantra.”

Manuscripts and editions.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 119, n. 32: “Ed. Jagad Dhar Zadoo, Srinagar 1947 (KSTS, 70); cf. also IOL-SB, III, p. 2781; Kavirāj, TSāh, p. 69f.; NCC II, p. 290 (about 25 Mss.). There are 15 or 16 chapters.” [IOL-SB = the catalogue of Sanskrit printed books of the India Office Library, London; Kavirāj, TSāh = Tāntrika Sāhitya; NCC = New Catalogus Catalogorum, the consolidated catalogue of Sanskrit manuscripts, Madras.]

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 120: one of the versions of the Uḍḍīśa group is the “Uḍḍāmara or Uḍḍāmareśvara Tantra, alias Mantracintāmaṇi, a dialogue between Śiva and Pārvatī in about 700 ślokas and mostly 16 chapters”.

  Note. In the same place Goudriaan mentions also another “Uḍḍāmareśvaratantra preserved in Orissa”, which, in his words, “seems to be a completely different text of Kaula character”.

- Muktabodha M00169: “Editor: Zadoo J. D. Photographic facsimiles from vol 70 of the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies.”

- GRETIL: “Based on the edition by J.D. Zadoo, Srinagar: The Normal Press, 1947. Input by Oliver Hellwig”.

18. Toḍalatantra

Dating.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 80–81: “The Toḍalatantra is mentioned in some old lists and often referred to, e.g. in the Mātṛkābheda and the Lakṣmīdharā.”

In n. 26: Toḍala/Trotala stands as no. 43 in the Kulacūḍāmaṇitantra list, no. 44 in the Āgamatattvavilāsa list, and nos. 46–47 (Trotala, Trotalottara) in the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava list.

Note. Right there Goudriaan remarks that Kṣemarāja (ad Netratantra 19.182) mentions Toṭula in connection with exorcism, "a subject absent from the text of the Toḍala known to us". Therefore the early mention does not necessarily refer to our text.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 86, on the whole group of texts about the ten mahāvidyās: "As a rule, these works are of late date and seem to hail from Bengal or adjacent areas. There has already been occasion to refer to the Toḍalatantra which mentioned the ten Mahāvidyās as a group."

- Sanderson 2009, p. 241 (added in edition 2): the Sarvollāsa gives a canon list of 64 tantras, "cited from the Toḍalatantra but not appearing in the published text of that work". Sanderson 2009, p. 242: "The Toḍalatantra teaches the rites of these three alone" [of these three goddesses alone: Kālī, Tārā and Tripurasundarī].

- Why there is no absolute date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information): neither Goudriaan nor Sanderson gives one.

Manuscripts and editions.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, nn. 25 and 27:
    - manuscripts: "NCC, IV, p. 225; RASB Cat., p. 208f.; Orissa Cat., Nos. 19–21";
    - editions: "Ed. Bhagīratha Śarmā, Prayāga V.S. 2018 (A.D. 1961/62); ed. G. Kavirāj, in: Tantrasaṃgraha, II, p. 53–94. There are earlier editions from Bengal."
- GRETIL sa_toDalatantra: "Based on the ed. by Gopinath Kaviraj in: Tantrasamgraha, vol. 2, Varanasi : Varanaseya Sanskrit Vishvavidyalaya 1970 (Yogatantra-Granthamala, 4) Input by Oliver Hellwig".

19. Vīṇāśikhatantra

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 51: "The Vīṇāśikha, our only complete surviving Tantra of the vāmasrotaḥ".

  On p. 46 Sanderson names "the texts of the vāmasrotaḥ, of which only the Vīṇāśikha has come down to us".

  The cult of the four sisters of Tumburu, to which the text is devoted, Sanderson considers very early (pp. 50–51): it is known to Dharmakīrti, and a Gilgit fragment on this theme dates from "around the middle of the sixth century". This is a dating of the cult, not of the Vīṇāśikha itself.

- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: “6th–10th century CE”.
- Why there is no dating of the text itself (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information): Sanderson dates the cult, not the text. The Goudriaan 1985 edition with the introduction is not in the AI’s possession (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it).

Manuscripts and editions.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 36: “the only text of this group which seems to have survived, the Vīṇāśikhatantra (VST), preserved in a presumably unique palm-leaf Ms. of considerable antiquity (about A.D. 1200?)”.

  In n. 16: “Ms. Natl. Archives Kathmandu No. 1-1076/Śaivatantra 171”.

- GRETIL sa_vINAzikhatantra: “Based on the edition by T. Goudriaan, Delhi 1985. Input by Somadeva Vasudeva”.

20. Tantrāloka with the commentary of Jayaratha

Dating.

- The author: “Abhinavagupta (fl. c. 975–1025)” (Sanderson 2009, p. 46).
- Jayaratha (in the first version I mistakenly wrote that there is no date; initially overlooked by the AI, added later):
  - Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 60 (in the section on the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava): > “it should be considered a relatively old piece of work because it has been commented upon by the Kashmirian Jayaratha who has been placed about 1200 A.D.”

    Goudriaan gives the source of this dating in n. 10: “PANDEY, Abhinavagupta, p. 262”.

  - Sanderson 2009, p. 221, n. 500: > “Jayadratha was the brother of Jayaratha, author of the Tantrālokaviveka, on whose date see SANDERSON 2007a, pp. 418–419.”

    Note. The work Sanderson 2007a is not in the AI’s possession (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it), so I do not quote Sanderson’s date.

Editions.

- Muktabodha M00092/M00093: “The photographic facsimiles are from the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies volumes 23, 28, 30, 36, 35, 29, 41, 47, 59, 52, 57 and 58.”
- GRETIL: “KSTS No. 23, 28, 30, 36, 35, 29, 41, 47, 59, 52, 57, 58 (1918–1938)”, “database copyright (C) Jun TAKASHIMA 1996–2000”.

- Why there is no information on manuscripts (the AI did not search beyond its sources): in my works the manuscripts of the Tantrāloka are not described.

21. Siddhayogeśvarīmata

Dating. The main source is Törzsök 1999, the edition of this text.

    p. vii: > “However, it may not be too far-fetched to presume that the Siddhayogeśvarīmata — or its long recension — was probably composed around the seventh century CE. As the terminus post quem would be even more hypothetic, no attempt has been made here at its determination.”

  [Terminus post quem = the lower limit.]

    p. vi: the text is older than the Mālinīvijayottara, since the Mālinīvijayottaratantra itself declares that it derives from the Siddhayogeśvarīmata (see no. 4).
- Törzsök 1999, p. v, on the two recensions: > “The available evidence in support of the primacy of the longer version seems stronger, yet the relative dating of the recensions needs more decisive evidence.”

  The longer recension is known from quotations in Kashmiri authors, the shorter one from Nepalese manuscripts.

- Bang 2018, p. 82: “According to Tantrasadbhāva 1.13-4, there were two tantras born from the Siddhayogeśvarīmata”.

Manuscripts (Törzsök 1999, p. lxxix, “The manuscripts of the Siddhayogeśvarīmata”):

- D: > “Paper. Devanāgarī. … National Archives Kathmandu Ms.No.5-2403 (Śaivatantra 1630). NGMPP Reel No.A 203/6. This manuscript is most probably a twentieth century transcript of a guptākṣara (or ‘early Licchavi’) palm-leaf manuscript mentioned by Hara Prasad Śāstrī…”

  The palm-leaf manuscript itself, according to Törzsök, “appears to have been lost”.

- N: > “Paper. Newari. Almost complete (only folio 1 is missing) … Catalogued under No. 5948 in Shastri-Chakravarti 1939 vol.3. part 1. Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta. 5465 (G). Contains a date of Nepalese saṃvat 793 (ca. 1663 AD).”

- Törzsök 1999, p. lxx: “since we have only two manuscripts of the SYM”. The edition does not cover all chapters.

22. Tantrasadbhāva

Dating. The main source is Bang 2018.

- pp. 82–83: > “The earliest external reference to the Tantrasadbhāva is by Abhinavagupta which allows us to think that the existence of this text goes back to before the tenth century. … Since the earliest Nepalese manuscript of the text is dated to the eleventh century, the composition of multiple textual layers of this work might have taken place before or during the transmission in Nepal.”
- In the same place, p. 83 — the conclusion: > “Therefore, based on the above, the date of the composition and the redaction of the Tantrasadbhāva may be placed around the eighth to ninth centuries.”
- Bang 2018, p. 82, on the Brahmayāmala: “This could mean that the Tantrasadbhāva postdates the Brahmayāmala, but its dating is not so far from the time of the composition of the Brahmayāmala.”
- Sanderson 2009, p. 50: the Tantrasadbhāva is later than the Svacchanda and earlier than the Kubjikāmata.

Manuscripts.

- Bang 2018, p. 40: > “Siglum A NAK 5-445 NGMPP microfilm reel no. A 44-2, 56 x 5 cm x 186 folios … complete, palm-leaf, Old Newarī (Bhujimol) script, dated to Saṃvat 217 (1097/8 c.e in the reign of Harṣadeva) … Siglum B NAK 1-362 NGMPP microfilm reel no. A 44-1 … incomplete, Palm-leaf, Old Newarī script. Siglum C NAK 5-1985 NGMPP microfilm reel no. A 188-22 to 189-1 … Complete, Paper, Devanāgarī, apograph of ms. A.”
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 39: “There seems to be only one Ms., dated A.D. 1097”.
- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Tantrasadbhāva. NAK MS 5-445, NGMPP A44/2: palm-leaf; Kuṭila script.”

  Note. In the bibliography of Bang 2018 itself, manuscript A is recorded as “NAK 1-145 ngmpp A44-2”. In the main text of the same work it is 5-445, as in Sanderson.

I do not have a full electronic text. Bang edits only ch. 1, 3, 9, 18 and 28.

23. Jayadrathayāmala, ṣaṭka 4

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 50: “the first hexad of the Jayadrathayāmala after the Kubjikāmata, and the remaining three hexads after the first”. Hence the fourth hexad is later than the first, and that one is later than the Kubjikāmata.
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: “6th–10th century CE”.
- Why there is no absolute date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the needed work is not accessible to the AI): Sanderson gives here only the relative order. He sets out his arguments in the works Sanderson 2001 and 2002 (Sanderson 2009, p. 50, nn. 18–20), which the AI does not have; I did not try to obtain them.

Manuscripts.

- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Jayadrathayāmala, Ṣaṭka 4. NAK MS 1-1468, NGMPP B122/4: paper; Newari script; A.D. 1626/7.”
- Addition (17.10.2026). This very manuscript is now available as the electronic text Muktabodha M00681 (“Jayadrathayāmala Ṣaṭka 4”, rev. 0 — 09.04.2026): paper, Newari script, 237/239 folios, copied in 1626/7; all references to ṣaṭka 4 in the compendium are given from this file.
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 45: > “The four Ṣaṭkas have been transmitted in manuscripts of very unequal age; only that which contains the fourth Ṣaṭka is surmised to date from an early period, viz. the end of the twelfth or the beginning of the thirteenth century. According to its colophon, it belongs to the Vidyāpīṭha of the Bhairavasrotas and to the Śiraścheda.”

  Note. Sanderson dates the manuscript of the 4th ṣaṭka to 1626/7, Goudriaan to the end of the 12th or the beginning of the 13th c. Possibly different manuscripts are meant. Goudriaan does not indicate the manuscript number at this point.

This text is available to me only in the translation of Mallinson & Singleton 2017 (6.1.2). There is no Sanskrit.

24. Brahmayāmala (IFP T522; M00319)

What this text is. This is not the early Picumata. In the bibliography of Sanderson 2009 it is described thus: > “Brahmayāmala IFP. IFP MS Transcript 522 (‘Brahmayāmalākhyaṃ mātṛpratiṣṭhātantram’). Incomplete: contains Paṭalas 1–51.1–29b.”

[“The tantra on the installation of [images of] the Mothers, called the Brahmayāmala”.]

Sanderson quotes it (Sanderson 2009, p. 282, n. 673) in the section on the rules of image installation.

Why there is no dating of this text (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): Sanderson only describes and quotes the transcript; he does not write about the date. In my other works this text is not discussed. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

For comparison — the early Picumata (Brahmayāmala), to which M00319 does not belong:

- Sanderson 2009, p. 51: > “the Skandapurāṇa-Ambikākhaṇḍa, whose earliest surviving manuscript was completed in 810, lists seven Yāmala texts, beginning with the Brahmayāmala, as Tantras of the Mother Goddesses (mātṛtantrāṇi). The date of the text itself is still a matter of debate; but it is unlikely to have been composed later than the end of the seventh century or earlier than the sixth."

- The Picumata manuscript (Sanderson 2009, bibliography): "Picumata (Brahmayāmala). NAK MS 3-370, NGMPP A42/6: palm-leaf; Newari script; A.D. 1052."
- The AI does not have the editions Hatley 2018 and Kiss 2015. I tried to download Hatley 2018 from archive.org, but the server returned an error 500. I did not try to obtain Kiss 2015 (the needed works are not accessible to the AI).

Manuscripts of M00319. Muktabodha: "Manuscript: IFP transcript T00522".

25. Piṅgalāmata

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 274, n. 651 (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): > "None of the early works of this class have been published. Those known to learned authors before the end of the eleventh century and surviving in manuscripts are the Mayasaṃgraha, not to be confused with the published Mayamata, a later south-Indian work, the Piṅgalāmata, the Mohacūḍottara, and the Devyāmata, which declares itself the pratiṣṭhātantram of the Niśvāsa."

  ["Early works of this class" = the pratiṣṭhā-tantras.] Hence, according to Sanderson, the Piṅgalāmata existed before the end of the 11th c.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 280: the Piṅgalāmata is named among "the early Pratiṣṭhātantras".

- The lower limit by the manuscript is 1174 (see below). This date is later than Sanderson's testimony.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 46: the text declares itself a follower of the Brahmayāmala, but "this is a text of very different character". The introductory chapter Vyākhyāprakaraṇa, according to Goudriaan, "was probably added afterwards".

- Why there is no precise date of composition (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information): neither Sanderson nor Goudriaan names one. In the bibliography of Bang 2018 (p. 525) a dissertation is indicated devoted specifically to the dating of this and related texts: "Mills, Elizabeth 2011* Dating and placing early Śaiva texts through prāsādalakṣaṇa. A study of prāsādalakṣaṇa material in six early Śaiva texts: the Bṛhat-kālottara Mahātantra; the Niśvāse Mahātantre Pratiṣṭhātantra; the Mayasaṃgraha, with its commentary, the Bhāvacūḍāmaṇi; and the Brahmayāmala Jayadrathādhikāra Piṅgalāmata. Unpublished doctoral thesis submitted to the University of Oxford in 2010." [Prāsādalakṣaṇa = the prescriptions on temple architecture.] The AI does not have this dissertation (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; it is unpublished, and I did not try to obtain it), so its conclusions are unknown.

Manuscripts.

- Muktabodha M00305: “Manuscript: NGMCP 3-376/vi 113” [= śaivatantra; NGMCP = Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project].

  The Muktabodha description (Dyczkowski) reports on the genre: “The Piṅgalāmata is a Pratiṣṭhātantra … Practically all the early surviving Pratiṣṭhātantras are Saiddhāntika. The Piṅgalāmata is an exception as it affiliates itself to the predominantly śākta brahmayāmala (Picumata). Moreover, as its other name - Jayadrathādhikara - indicates, it is also associated with the Kālī-centred Jayadrathayāmala.”

- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Piṅgalāmata (Jayadrathādhikāra). NAK MS 3-376, NGMPP A42/2: palm-leaf; Newari script; A.D. 1174.”

  The NAK number 3-376 coincides with Muktabodha.

- Bang 2018, p. 19: “NGMPP reel no. A 42-2. 42.5 x 6 cm x 125 folios with two string holes and one column. complete. It is dated to Saṃvat 294 (1174 CE) in the reign of Rudradeva…”.

27. Parātantra; Kaularahasya; Amṛteśa; Yoginīhṛdaya

Parātantra.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 76–77: “The archaism displayed by the Yonigahvara is not shared any more by the Parātantra, but this text contains material which is evidently based upon old traditions … for which it is a most important source”. The matter is the doctrine of the six āmnāyas.
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 15: an example of a text presenting itself as part of a larger tradition: “the”Parātantra from the Śiraścheda”“.
- Why there is no absolute date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): Goudriaan does not give one. In my other works the text is not discussed (Goodall 2004 mentions only a similar name of a different work). Other literature was not searched by the AI.
- Edition (from the first page of Muktabodha M00062): “parātantram … śrī dhana śamśera jaṅga bahādura rāṇā … prakāśaka caṇḍī kāryālaya prayāga … prathama saṃskaraṇa saṃvat 2016”. Translation: “Parātantra … Śrī Dhana Śamśera Jaṅga Bahādura Rāṇā … publisher: Caṇḍī Kāryālaya, Prayāga … first edition, [Vikrama] era 2016” (≈ 1959/60 CE — my conversion).

Kaularahasya.

- Why there is no dating (the text is not mentioned in the AI's sources; the AI did not search beyond its sources): the name occurs in none of my eight works. Other literature was not searched by the AI.
- Muktabodha M00326: "Manuscript: NGMCP Ms. No. 1-257 Reel no. A-146/8. Many folios are missing in this manuscript."

Amṛteśa(tantra) = Netratantra; see no. 6. Muktabodha M00504: the manuscript "dated Nepal samvat 320 i.e. 1101 C.E."

Yoginīhṛdaya.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 62: "also known as the second part of the Vāmakeśvaratantra comprising its chapters six, seven and eight".
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 64, on the Tantrarāja: "the text is considerably younger than the NSA and the YH" [NSA = Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava; YH = Yoginīhṛdaya]. This is only a relative anchoring.
- Terminus ante quem via the commentator (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later). Our electronic text M00115 is the Yoginīhṛdaya with the Dīpikā of Amṛtānanda. Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 152: > "Amṛtānanda(nātha), who seems to have been a Kashmirian and a pupil of Puṇyānandanātha, lived at the end of the twelfth and the beginning of the thirteenth century."

  The source in n. 59: "V.V. Dwiveda, Skt. preface (Anuprastāvikam) to Kavirāj's ed. of the YH, p. 5".

  Note. It follows that the Yoginīhṛdaya existed no later than the turn of the 12th–13th c. This is my conclusion.
- Törzsök 1999, p. x, n. 44 — a caveat: the "Yoginīhṛdaya" in the Brahmayāmala's list of texts "is, of course, not identical with the well-known Yoginīhṛdaya of the Tripurasundarī cult (see Sanderson 1988:158)". Therefore the early mention of this name in the Brahmayāmala (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 16) does not refer to our text.
- Muktabodha M00115: "yoginīhṛdaya with the dīpikā by amṛtānanda; Editor: gopīnātha kavirāja".

B. South Indian āgamas and upāgamas; the Śivadharma corpus

General framework for the later South Indian āgamas (Sanderson 2009, pp. 278–279):

> "For, no doubt in consequence of the efflorescence of the Śaiva temple cult under the Coḷa emperors, we find a new wave of Śaiva scriptures appearing in the South, in which the ceremonial life of the temple and the duties and rights of its priests are regulated, and, indeed, form their principal subject matter.

> Citations from the majority of the scriptural texts of this kind do not appear before the works of Vedajñānaguru II, composed during the second half of the sixteenth century. But some others are already being cited in the thirteenth, and one in the twelfth."

N. 662 to this passage (Sanderson 2009, p. 279) lists the texts first quoted by Vedajñānaguru: > "the Aṃśumat, the Ajita, the Kāśmīratantra, the Cintyaviśva/Cintyaviśvasādākhya, the Dīpta, the Devīkālottara, the Bhīma, the Makuṭa, the Mukhabimba, the Yogaja, the Raurava, the Vijaya (/Vijayottara), the Vidveṣaṇa, the Vīra, the Saṃtāna, the Sahasra, the Siddha, the Sūkṣma, and the Skandakālottara."

N. 663 (in the same place): > "The extant Kāmika is perhaps the first work of this kind to be cited in a dateable work. Substantial passages found in it are quoted without attribution in the Jñānaratnāvalī of Jñānaśiva, a teacher of Trilocanaśiva and therefore a near contemporary of Aghoraśiva, who completed his Kriyākramadyotikā in 1157. The next earliest known work in which there are citations from such scriptures is the Śivapūjāstavavyākhyā composed by a nameless author in the thirteenth century, probably in its second half. … He cites the Kāraṇa, the Acintya, the Suprabheda, the south-Indian Pauṣkara, and the Vātulaśuddhākhya."

Sanderson indicates that this information was taken by him from a lecture by D. Goodall (Kathmandu, 2008).

28. Kālottara (GOML (Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai); M00248)

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 45: among the early Siddhānta scriptures the "Kālottara in a number of redactions" is named.
- Sanderson 2009, p. 295, n. 701 — the redactions: the Sārdhatriśatika-, Trayodaśaśatika-, Dviśatika- and Saptaśatika-Kālottara.
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 38 (added in edition 2): the Kālottaratantra is "an undoubtedly old text which has often been quoted by Tantric authorities" (full quotation under no. 9).
- Goodall 2004, p. xcvi also speaks of a "hundred-verse recension" (Kālajñāna), and n. 151 refers to the list of recensions in Bhatt (introduction to the Sārdhatriśatikālottara edition, p. xlviii).
- Why there is no dating of precisely this South Indian text in 68 paṭalas (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources; the needed work is not accessible to the AI). All the cited statements refer to the Kālottara in general or to other recensions. My works say nothing about this recension. Bhatt's list of recensions is not in the AI's possession; I did not try to obtain it.

Note. The colophon in the electronic text calls it "kālottare dvādaśasahasrasaṃhitāyāṃ" ("in the Kālottara, in the collection of twelve thousand [verses]"; M00248, file line 12161). How this recension relates to the early ones I have not established.

Manuscripts. Muktabodha M00248: "Manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0059. Copied from IFP/EFEO transcript T0059 which is from a MS belonging to the GOML, Madras, No. R 14343."

29. Acintyaviśvasādākhya

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 65, n. 73 — on Somaśambhu's Paddhati (written "probably in 1073", Sanderson 2009, p. 65): > "much of it was taken over in the late south-Indian Saiddhāntika scriptures Cintyaviśvasādākhya and Uttarakāmika (BRUNNER 1998, p. lviii–lix)."

  Therefore the text was composed after ~1073.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662: the Cintyaviśvasādākhya is in the list of texts first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II (second half of the 16th c.).

- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663: an "Acintya" is already quoted in the Śivapūjāstavavyākhyā of the 13th c.

  Note. Whether this "Acintya" is identical with our Acintyaviśvasādākhya, Sanderson does not specify at this point.

- Why there is no more precise date (the needed work is not accessible to the AI): Brunner 1998 (the introduction to Somaśambhupaddhati IV), to which Sanderson refers, is not in the AI's possession; I did not try to obtain it.

Manuscripts. Muktabodha M00272: "Manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0007A and T0007B … Added pages 1271 to 1316".

30. Suprabheda

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663: the Suprabheda is quoted in the Śivapūjāstavavyākhyā, "composed … in the thirteenth century, probably in its second half".

- Kafle 2015, p. 35 (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later). Among the texts that Kafle calls "unquestionably younger than the Niśvāsamukha": > "Niśvāsamukha 2:82c–86b in Somaśambhupaddhati 1:6:5–8, Kriyākramadyotikā (§ 67, p.134), and Ātmārthapūjāpaddhati (attributed to Suprabhedāgama), while the first two lines are found in the Jñānaratnāvalī fol. 126b (also attributed to the Suprabhedāgama) (R 14898, p. 144)."

Note. Sanderson considers Jñānaśiva, the author of the Jñānaratnāvalī, a near contemporary of Aghoraśiva (1157; Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663). If so, the lines marked “Suprabhedāgama” already existed in the 12th c. This is my conclusion from collating two sources, not a statement of Kafle or Sanderson. Whether these lines coincide with the published Suprabheda I have not checked.

- Why there is no absolute date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): there is no such date in my works. There are only quotations providing an upper limit.

N.B. — an observation from the electronic text, not a researcher’s opinion. * In Aghoraśiva’s Kriyākramadyotikā (M00126; completed in 1157 according to Sanderson 2009, p. 279) the word “suprabhede” (more often in the form “śrīmatsuprabhede” — “in the venerable Suprabheda”) occurs 15 times: on lines 339, 646, 705, 2525, 2930, 3112, 3764, 4166, 4500, 5622, 5667, 6811, 8206, 8286 and 9435 of the file. In the same work the definition of vīrāsana according to the Suprabheda is quoted (see Part IV § 2.3). * If the 1927 edition transmits Aghoraśiva’s text correctly, then some Suprabheda existed before 1157. Whether it coincides with the published one (M00090) I have not checked.

Manuscripts and editions. Muktabodha M00090: “suprabhedāgama (kriyāpāda and caryāpāda). Transcribed from the Devakottai series.” I have not seen the printed edition. Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 14, n. 59, refers to “H. BRUNNER, Analyse du Suprabhedāgama, JA 255, 1967, p. 31-60”. The AI does not have this article (the needed work is not accessible to the AI; I did not try to obtain it).

31. Makuṭāgama / Mukuṭāgama

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662: the Makuṭa is first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II (second half of the 16th c.).
- Sanderson 2009, pp. 286–287: the Makuṭa is given as an example of the late “Śāktism” of the southern temple cult: “In the south-Indian Saiddhāntika scriptures Raurava, Cintya, Makuṭa, and Sūkṣma all the male deities in the circuits surrounding Śiva in temple worship … have been provided with a personal Śakti”.

Manuscripts and editions.

- Muktabodha M00036: “makuṭāgama chapters 1 - 11 … This e-text was transcribed from the text originally published in grantha script by C. Swaminattha Gurukkal and provisionally corrected by Mark S.G. Dyczkowski. The photographic facsimile is from the Devakottai Series.”
- Muktabodha M00424: “Manuscript: IFP/EFEO paper transcript T00274”.

32. Jñānasiddhi(yāgama) (E0006)

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 287, on the Tamil Tirumantiram and on the combination of Śaiva Siddhānta, Vedānta, Śākta kuṇḍalinī-yoga and the cult of Naṭarāja: > “This is a combination which is unlikely to predate the twelfth century (see also GOODALL 2004, pp. xxix–xxx). In Sanskrit the same amalgam appears in such works as the scripture Jñānasiddhyāgama and the Siddhāntapaddhati of a Jñānaśiva.”

Manuscripts.

- Muktabodha E0006: > “Manuscript: IFP transcript T0178. IFP transcript 178 copied from a MS belonging to the GOML, Madras. No. R 16810. Although it calls itself an Aagama this text reads more like a tract dealing a miscellenia of topics related to śaiva Yoga.”
- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography) names another transcript: “Jñānasiddhyāgama. IFP MS Transcript 507, pp. 395–481.”

Note. The “Jñānasiddhi of Indrabhūti” in the same bibliography of Sanderson 2009 is a Buddhist text and has nothing to do with ours.

33. Kāmika (pūrva / uttara)

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663: “The extant Kāmika is perhaps the first work of this kind to be cited in a dateable work”. It is quoted without attribution in the Jñānaratnāvalī of Jñānaśiva, “a near contemporary of Aghoraśiva, who completed his Kriyākramadyotikā in 1157”. The full quotation and translation are at the beginning of section B.
- Sanderson 2009, p. 65, n. 73: the Uttarakāmika is assigned to the “late south-Indian Saiddhāntika scriptures” that borrowed from Somaśambhu’s Paddhati (about 1073).
- Sanderson 2009, p. 274, n. 652: Sanderson quotes Kāmika, Pūrvabhāga 1.121c–126. On p. 275, n. 654 he notes that Vedānta-Deśika (14th c.) gives almost the same passage as a quotation from the Kāraṇatantra.
- Kafle 2015, p. 35: the Pūrvakāmika is among the texts “unquestionably younger than the Niśvāsamukha”.

Manuscripts and editions.

- Muktabodha M00124 and M00125: “Transcribed from an edition in Grantha script published in Madras in 1909”.
- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Kāmika. No editor accredited: published by C. Swaminatha Sivacarya. Madras: Dakṣiṇabhāratārcakasaṅgha, 1975.”

34. Aṃśumat (Kāśyapa)

Dating. Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662: the Aṃśumat is the first in the list of texts first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II (“second half of the sixteenth century”).

Manuscripts. Muktabodha M00198: “Manuscript: IFP transcript 1. IFP transcript 1 of RE. 19987 Palm-leaf beginning leaf (25)19a” [RE = the manuscript number in the French Institute of Pondicherry collection].

35. Mohacūḍottara; Yogaja; Sūkṣma; Candrajñāna (the Vīraśaiva recension)

Mohacūḍottara.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 45: “…the Mayasaṃgraha, the Devyāmata, and the Mohacūḍottara, the last three representing a sub-corpus of texts of more restricted application concerned with the rituals of the installation of images and the consecration of temples”. The text belongs to the early Siddhānta scriptures.
- Sanderson 2009, p. 274, n. 651 (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): the Mohacūḍottara is among the pratiṣṭhā-tantras “known to learned authors before the end of the eleventh century and surviving in manuscripts”. The full quotation and translation are under no. 25.
- Manuscripts:
    - Muktabodha M00304: “Manuscript: NGMCP 5-1977 Reel A 182/2”.
    - Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Mohacūḍottara. NAK MS 5-1977, NGMPP A182/2: paper; Devanāgarī script; copied from a palm-leaf manuscript of [Valabhī era, year] 806 (= A.D. 1125/6).”

  The number coincides: the Muktabodha electronic text was made from this manuscript.

Yogaja.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662: first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II (second half of the 16th c.).
- Muktabodha M00250: “Manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0024. Copied from a manuscript belonging to M.K.S. Bhattar, Madurai”.

Sūkṣma(āgama).

- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662: first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II.
- Sanderson 2009, pp. 286–287: an example of the late “Śāktism” (see no. 31).
- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 664: the Sūkṣmāgama contains a chapter on the protective ritual for the king (rājarakṣāvidhiḥ).
- Manuscripts:
    - Muktabodha M00329: “Manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T01003 copied from RE10779 of I.F.I.”

- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Sūkṣmāgama. IFP MS Transcript 1003.”

Candrajñāna (the Vīraśaiva recension).

- Why there is no dating (the text is not mentioned in the AI’s sources; the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources). The Vīraśaiva recension is not mentioned at all in my eight works. The name Candrajñāna itself occurs only in Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 14, where it stands in the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava list of 64 tantras among texts that Goudriaan calls “all of them without doubt ancient texts quoted elsewhere or even preserved”. This is said of the Candrajñāna in general, not of the Vīraśaiva recension. Other literature was not searched by the AI.
- Muktabodha M00201: “vīraśaiva rescension of the candrajñānāgama. Made possible by the authorization and kind permission of ārādhya Candraśekharasvāmī head of jaṃgamavāḍī maṭha vārāṇasī”.

36. Sakalāgamasārasaṅgraha

Why there is no dating (the text is not mentioned in the AI’s sources; the AI did not search beyond its sources): the name occurs in none of my eight works. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

Manuscripts. Muktabodha M00063: “Manuscript: IFP transcript T0351.”

37. Śivadharma (M00209)

Note. First, whether this is the right text. Muktabodha warns that this South Indian “śivadharma” is not necessarily the Śivadharmaśāstra preserved in Nepalese manuscripts: “This zivadharma differs from the text of the same name in transcript no. 72. There the colophon reads: śrīśivadharmaśāstre nandiprokte; the colophon of this version reads simply śrīśivadharmaśāstre”. Translation: [“…in the venerable Śivadharmaśāstra, uttered by Nandin; the colophon of this version reads simply ‘in the venerable Śivadharmaśāstra’”.] Therefore the datings below refer to the Nepalese Śivadharmaśāstra. Whether they are applicable to M00209 has not been established.

Dating of the Nepalese Śivadharmaśāstra (according to Kafle 2015):

- p. 54: “R.C. Hazra proposed approximate dates for the first two works of the corpus … He suggests that the Śivadharmaśāstra was composed between 200 and 500 AD, while the Śivadharmottara came much later, between 700 and 800 AD”.
- p. 55: “Bisschop (2014) has recently presented the view that some of the information in chapter six of the Śivadharmaśāstra is not easy to align with a date earlier than the 6th century.”

- p. 57: “the Śivadharmaśāstra, which can be tentatively dated around the 6th to 7th centuries (Bisschop 2014), although there is no irrefutable evidence regarding its date.”
- Why there is no dating of M00209 itself (the AI did not search beyond its sources): the South Indian version is not discussed in my works.

Manuscripts.

- Muktabodha M00209: “Manuscript: IFP/EFEO 860 copied from R2442 G.O.N.L., Madras” [G.O.N.L. = GOML, the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai].
- The Nepalese codices of the corpus (Kafle 2015, p. 54): “A number of Nepalese palm-leaf manuscripts transmit eight works of this corpus in a single codex”.

38. Dharmaputrikā (the Śivadharma corpus)

Dating.

- Barois 2017: > “It comprises about 350 ślokas and was composed in the 10th century at the latest (an 11th century manuscript is preserved in Calcutta).”

  And on chapter 2: “This chapter is an ancient and unparalleled testimony of a systematic and detailed description of a closed group of yogic postures, preceding by at least two centuries the description of postures in the Yogaśāstra by Hemacandra (12th century).”

- Kafle 2015, p. 54: the Dharmaputrikā is the eighth text of the corpus in the Nepalese codices.

Manuscripts and editions.

- Kafle 2015, p. 94 — the Calcutta codex that Barois apparently means: > “Manuscript A. This manuscript is from the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Kolkata. It is a palm-leaf manuscript written in Newari script … The MS number is G 4077/3. … The MS contains nine separate texts: Śivadharmaśāstra, Śivadharmottara, Śivadharmasaṅgraha, Umāmaheśvarasaṃvāda, Śivopaniṣad, Uttarottarasaṃvāda, Vṛṣasārasaṅgraha, Dharmaputrikā and an otherwise unknown Lalitavistara. As indicated by its palaeographic features, it can be placed at the end of the 10th or beginning of the 11th century.”
- Barois 2017 — the basis of her text: > “The Sanskrit text given here is based on the Wellcome Library’s apograph of a Nepalese manuscript of the 12th century, and on the edition of the text in Kathmandu in 1998. The draft of the critical edition of the Dharmaputrikā, by Nirajan Kafle and Anil Kumar Acharya, has also been consulted.”
- Kafle 2015, p. 54, on the Kathmandu edition: “a printed version (based on a single manuscript and full of mistakes) published by Yogi Narahari Nath, of all the texts mentioned with the exception of the Lalitavistara”.

C. Śākta and Kaula texts (late)

The main source for this section is Goudriaan's survey (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981). For most late Śākta texts he states directly that an exact date is difficult to establish.

39. Kulārṇavatantra

Dating.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 94: > "It is very difficult to ascertain the exact date of the text. The most recent estimation is between about 1000 and 1400 A. D."

  The source of this estimate is indicated in n. 11: "CARLSTEDT, Studier, p. 15".

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 93: "According to the colophons, the text constitutes only the fifth khaṇḍa called mokṣapāda (or: -vāda) of an original Kulārṇavatantra of 125.000 ślokas, but the text as it stands comprises seventeen chapters and about 2060 ślokas."

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 94 — it is unclear who borrowed from whom. Chapter 1 coincides with ch. XVI of the Garuḍapurāṇasāroddhāra, and "It is still an undecided question which of the two versions is the borrower".

Manuscripts and editions.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 93: "There are numerous Mss. and several editions".

  N. 7: "The best known edition is by Tārānātha Vidyāratna, London 1917 (Tantrik Texts, V), Madras 1965; of the other editions, we mention those by J. Vidyāsāgar, Calcutta 1882, 1897; and by Bh. Śarmā, Prayāga 1963".

  N. 11: Carlstedt made a "crit. ed. of chs. 1 and 2 from about 20 Mss."

- Muktabodha M00031: "Created from a devanagari electronically typeset file prepared by Dr. Sudhakar Malaviya".

40. Tantrarāja(tantra) with the commentary Manoramā

Dating.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 64: > "That the text is considerably younger than the NSA and the YH is rendered probable by its much more numerous details…"

  [NSA = Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava; YH = Yoginīhṛdaya.]

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 64: the text calls itself the Kādimatatantra: “The name Tantrarāja … is, strictly speaking, not correct because the text introduces itself as the Kādimatatantra”.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 65, n. 24: “The Tantrarāja mentioned by Jayaratha in his comm. on the TA as a kula source … must have been a different text.”

- Why there is no absolute date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): Goudriaan gives only a relative anchoring. The reference points for the Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava (Jayaratha, about 1200, Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 60) and for the Yoginīhṛdaya (Amṛtānanda, end of the 12th — beginning of the 13th c., Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 152) yield no absolute date for the Tantrarāja from this anchoring: “younger” does not mean “younger by so much”. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

Editions.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 64, n. 23: “Tantrarāja Tantra, Part I (chs. 1-18), with comm. Manoramā, ed. Lakṣmaṇa Śāstrī, London 1918 (Tantrik Texts, VIII); Part II (chs. 19-36), with the same comm., ed. Sadāśiva Miśra, Calcutta/London 1926 (Tantrik Texts, XII).”

  In the same place on the commentary: “The Manoramā has been incorrectly ascribed to Prakāśānanda by the NCC” [NCC = New Catalogus Catalogorum, the consolidated catalogue of Sanskrit manuscripts, Madras].

- Muktabodha M00122: “tantrarājatantra with commentary manorama; Commentator: subhagānandanātha; Editor: lakṣmaṇa śāstrī; Editor: John Woodroffe”.

- Why there is no information on manuscripts (the AI did not search beyond its sources): in my works the manuscripts of the Tantrarāja are not described.

41. Śāradātilaka with the commentary of Rāghavabhaṭṭa

Dating.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 135: > “The author was a Śaiva religious leader of the Vārendra clan reported to have been a pupil of Utpala, the famous theoretician of the Kashmir Śaiva school. … Lakṣmaṇadeśika is commonly placed, however, in the eleventh century.”

  N. 16: “FARQUHAR, RLI, p. 267; GONDA, Rel. Indiens, I, p. 28, n. 9. But PADOUX, Recherches, p. 77, n. 3, frankly admits:”on en ignore la date”.” [“…admits: ‘the date is unknown’.”]

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 135: “It seems probable that the ŚT is secondary to the PS” [ŚT = Śāradātilaka; PS = Prapañcasāra].

- The commentary (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 135): Rāghavabhaṭṭa, “a South Indian scholar who came to live in Varanasi and wrote his commentary in A.D. 1494”.

- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: the Śāradātilaka is placed in the “12th century CE”.

  Note. Mallinson & Singleton 2017 (12th c.) and Goudriaan’s usual dating (11th c.) disagree.

Manuscripts and editions.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 134, n. 13:
  - “The most useful and most recent ed. is that by Mukunda Jhā Bakśī, with Rāghavabhaṭṭa’s comm., Varanasi 1963 (KSS, vol. 107), in 25 chs. and 3489 stanzas. Of older eds., we mention those by A. Avalon, Calcutta 1933 (2 vols.)…” [KSS = Kashi Sanskrit Series, Varanasi.];
  - “For the Mss., one should consult, besides the relevant entry in Kavirāj’s TSāh, p. 625f., also the Orissa Cat., Nos. 97-99, the RASB Cat., l.c., and the Bikaner Cat., Nos. 1324-26.” [Kavirāj’s TSāh = Tāntrika Sāhitya; RASB = the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta.]
- Muktabodha M00077: “Editor: Avalon, A … converted into roman transliteration from electronic devanagari typesetting files of Dr. S. Malaviya”.
- Why there is no date of the oldest manuscript (the AI did not search beyond its sources; the needed works are not accessible to the AI): Goudriaan refers to catalogues (Tāntrika Sāhitya, Orissa, RASB, Bikaner), which the AI does not have; I did not try to obtain them.

42. Gandharvatantra

Why there is no dating (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources). The text is described only in Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 73–74, and Goudriaan gives no date. The name does not occur in my other seven works. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 73–74: “The Gandharvatantra (or Gāndharvat.), revealed by Dattātreya to Viśvāmitra, is a voluminous text in 42 paṭalas which describes a great number of vidyās and various aspects of Tantric pūjās. Its main interest is in Tripurā worship… It is often quoted and a number of minor texts ascribe themselves to it.”

  Note. The sentence “The text appears to be of relatively late date and perhaps hails from Bengal” on p. 73 refers to the preceding text in the survey (the Kuloḍḍīśatantra), not to the Gandharvatantra.

Manuscripts and editions.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 74, n. 67: “Ed. R.M. Chaṭṭopādhyāya in Tantrasāra, Calcutta 1884; ed. U. Tarkaratna and T. Nyāyaratna … Calcutta 1886; ed. R.C. Kak and H. Bh. Shastri, Srinagar 1934 (KSTS, 62). The number of Mss. is not overwhelming: NCC V, p. 307f.; Kavirāj, TSāh, p. 172f.” [KSTS = Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar; NCC = New Catalogus Catalogorum, the consolidated catalogue of Sanskrit manuscripts, Madras; Kavirāj, TSāh = Tāntrika Sāhitya.]
- Muktabodha M00646: “From an original manuscript in the collection of Maharaja Harisinghji Bahadur, edited by Ram Chandra Kak and Harabhatta Shastri”. The beginning of the electronic text: “gandharvatantram | 1934 śrīnagara, kāśmīra” (“Gandharvatantra | 1934, Srinagar, Kashmir”). This is the KSTS 62 edition.

43. Viśvasāra; Sarvollāsa

Viśvasāra.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 97: > “It is not clear if the name of No. 38 in the ATV list, Viśvasāratantra … corresponds with an original Tantra. What we now possess under this title cannot properly be called a Tantra, because it bears the characteristics of an encyclopedic digest. In 8 paṭalas and 5108 ślokas it presents material on all kinds of Kaula subjects”.

  [ATV = Āgamatattvavilāsa.]

- Why there is no dating (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): Goudriaan does not give one; in my other works the text is not mentioned. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

- Muktabodha M00101: “Editor: Chatterji. Typed from edition by Chatterjee published in Calcutta, Bengal end of 19th century. Printed in Bengali characters.”

Sarvollāsa(tantra).

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 146: > “The Sarvollāsa(tantra) is a digest in 63 ullāsas and about 2250 ślokas, reputed to be the work of Sarvānandanātha of Mehar (Tripura district, E. of Bengal). He was a Siddha of great fame (sixteenth century)…”

- Sanderson 2009, p. 241 (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): “It is probable that Sarvānandanātha, who wrote his work in Senhati in what is now Bangladesh, was born around the beginning of the fifteenth century.” The source in n. 553: “SANDERSON 2007b, p. 236, fn. 89”.

Note. Goudriaan assigns Sarvānandanātha to the 16th century, Sanderson to a birth around the beginning of the 15th century. I do not resolve the discrepancy.

- Editions:
    - Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 147, n. 33: “The Sarvollāsa was edited by Rāsamohana Cakravartin, Calcutta 1953”. The same in the bibliography of Sanderson 2009.
    - Muktabodha M00120: “Author: sarvānanda … Editor: gopīnātha kavirāja”.

  Note. The editor is given differently in Muktabodha than in Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 and Sanderson 2009. Which edition underlies the electronic text I have not checked.

44. Kaulāvalīnirṇaya

Dating.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 144: > “Much more famous became the Kaulāvalīnirṇaya (KĀN) by Jñānānandagiri Paramahaṃsa. Of the author nothing else is known. The work is assigned to the sixteenth century of the Christian era. There are at least two versions: the longer or standard version contains 22 or 21 ullāsas and about 3850 stanzas; the shorter one in 9 ullāsas…”

Editions. Muktabodha M00231: “Author: jñānānandaparamahaṃsa; Editor: Arthur Avalon”. Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 mentions “Avalon’s ed.”

45. Phetkāriṇī; Bṛhannīla; Merutantra

Phetkāriṇītantra.

- Sanderson 2009, pp. 241–242 (omitted in the first version; added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): > “For the Śākta literature of the worship of this goddess has incorporated the Mahācīnakramatārāsādhana of the Buddhist Śāśvatavajra, which appears almost in its entirety in the eleventh chapter of the Śākta Phetkāriṇītantra. I am unable to determine within narrow limits how long after Śāśvatavajra this Tantra was composed. The earliest mention of the text in sources known to me is in 2.15 of the Sarvollāsatantra of Sarvānandanātha, in a list of a canon of sixty-four Tantras cited from the Toḍalatantra but not appearing in the published text of that work. It is probable that Sarvānandanātha, who wrote his work in Senhati in what is now Bangladesh, was born around the beginning of the fifteenth century. It is tempting to assume that the Phetkāriṇī was written at a time closer to Śāśvatavajra’s than to Sarvānandanātha’s, that is to say, when the Buddhist Mantranaya was still at its height in eastern India, before the destruction of the great monasteries around 1200.”

["This goddess" = Tārā.] On Śāśvatavajra — n. 552 in the same place: "Śāśvatavajra flourished around the last decades the tenth century and the first decades of the eleventh."

Note. Hence, according to Sanderson: not earlier than the turn of the 10th–11th c. (after Śāśvatavajra); the first known mention is in Sarvānandanātha (15th c.); he himself inclines towards a time before ~1200, but calls this only "tempting to assume".

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 115–116: the text "reckons itself to the Paścimāmnāya … but shows no affinity to other texts of that group" [Paścimāmnāya = the Western transmission]; "This gives the text the character of a digest, despite its title and anonymity". In the edition, according to Goudriaan, "21 chapters and nearly 1400 ślokas".

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 136: "The Phetkāriṇītantra, although an original Tantra in name, is in reality a similar digest".

  Note. Navamīsiṃha's Kulamuktikallolinī (see no. 54) draws on the "phetkāriṇītantra" — so says the Muktabodha description M00318.

- Editions:
  - Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): "Phetkāriṇītantra, ed. Gopinatha Kaviraja, In Tantrasaṅgraha, Part 2, pp. 161–306 … Varanasi 1970."
  - Muktabodha M00190: "Editor: caṭṭopādhyāya, rasika mohana" — another edition.

Bṛhannīlatantra.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 23: among the examples of texts having a "Bṛhat-"greater" recension beside it (Bṛhannīla, Bṛhadbhūtaḍāmara)".
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 87–88: on several texts named Nīlatantra.
- Sanderson 2009, p. 242 (added in edition 2): "The Toḍalatantra teaches the rites of these three alone, and the Bṛhannīlatantra follows the same model but adds Kāmākhyā, the great goddess of Assam."
- Why there is no dating (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): neither Goudriaan nor Sanderson gives a date. Other literature was not searched by the AI.
- Editions:
  - Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): "Bṛhannīlatantra, ed. Madhusūdan Kaul. Varajivan Prachya Bharati Granthamala 77. Varanasi: Chaukhamba Sanskrit Pratisthan, 1995."
  - Muktabodha M00116: "Editor: kaul madhusudan" — apparently this same edition.

Merutantra.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98: > “Although it has more than once been regarded as a late work because the town of London is said to be mentioned in it, it is possible that at least its core goes further back. But it does not appear in any traditional list of Tantras and there are not many quotations; it is, however, mentioned in the Siddhanāgārjunakakṣapuṭa (p. 265) among the sources utilized by the author.”
- Manuscripts (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 98): “the great number of Mss. … in some Mss. the number of ślokas seems to amount to 15.000 or more”.
- Muktabodha M00195: “merutantra with ṭippani; Commentator: raghunāthaśāstri”.

46. Vārāhī; Ācārasāra

Vārāhītantra.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 90–91: > “According to Farquhar, the Vārāhītantra was written in Bengal in about the sixteenth century, but it is not clear which text was meant by him. The Nepal Ms. described by H. P. Śāstrī contains a voluminous but corrupt text of 4600 ślokas divided over 36 chapters.”

  And further: “From the colophons to the chapters it appears that the Vārāhītantra reckons itself to the Dakṣiṇāmnāya, a statement which betrays its relative lateness” [Dakṣiṇāmnāya = the Southern transmission].

- Muktabodha M00317, Dyczkowski’s description — a terminus ante quem: > “It is also quoted in the Puraścaryārṇava which is attributed to the Nepalese king, Pratāpasiṃhaśāha. It is known to have been which was completed in 1775 ce, thus establishing the terminus ante quem for the date of the Vārāhītantra.”

  (The sentence in the original is grammatically corrupted: “It is known to have been which was completed”; I translate by the sense: “It is known that the Puraścaryārṇava was completed in 1775 CE”.)

  In the same place: “This Vārāhī Tantra is 4,631 verses long”.

  Note. Sanderson 2009 (bibliography) dates Pratāpasiṃha’s reign “r. 1775–1777”.

  In the same description (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): > “This Vārāhītantra associates itself with Kāmarūpa which is where it may possibly have been redacted. The colophons state that it belongs to the Dakṣiṇāmnāya. It draws extensively from other Tantras but also contains much original material. Indeed, it is a veritable compendium of śākta ritual procedures. It is quoted in several texts. These include the Mantramahārṇava, Tārābhaktisudhārṇava, āgamakalpalatā, Saubhāgyabhāskara, Tārārahasyavṛtti, āgamatattvavilāsa, Sarvollāsatantra, the Bengali Tantrasāra and Lakṣmīdharas commentary on the Saundaryalaharī. … Incidently, this fact demonstrates that the aforementioned texts must all be later.”

Note. (my conclusion; I have not found it in the researchers). If the Vārāhītantra is indeed quoted in the Sarvollāsatantra, then the terminus ante quem will be much earlier than 1775 — namely the time of Sarvānandanātha: the 16th c. per Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 146, or the 15th c. per Sanderson 2009, p. 241 (see no. 43). Dyczkowski's last sentence ("the aforementioned texts must all be later") I transmit as is, but it does not agree with the chronology of the Sarvollāsa. Whether this is the same text as the one Goudriaan describes from the Nepalese manuscript in 36 chapters I have not checked: Goudriaan has 4600 ślokas, Dyczkowski 4631 verses.

- Manuscripts (Muktabodha M00317): "Manuscript: NGMCP manuscript no.: 3-315 Reel No.: B 144/9 … Another complete manuscript is deposited in the library of Saṃpūrṇānanda Sanskrit University in Vārāṇasī."

Ācārasāratantra (M00501).

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 23: the identification of the names — "Cīnācāratantra = Ācārasāratantra = Mahācīnakramācāra".

- Why there is no dating of the text itself (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): besides the identification of the names there is nothing in Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, and the name does not occur in my other works. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

- Muktabodha M00501: > "Manuscript: NGMCP 3-325 Reel B 116/8. The manuscript contains 4 chapters of the haṭhapradīpakā followed by the acārasāratantra which teachs a form of extreme Kaulism called cīnācāra. This is followed by a tract of 300 verses called samayācāra. Followed by a hymn to a goblet of wine…"

  Note. The Haṭhapradīpikā copied in the same manuscript before the tantra is assigned in Mallinson & Singleton 2017 (Timeline) to the "15th century CE". This only says that the manuscript itself is not earlier than the Haṭhapradīpikā. It does not determine the date of the Ācārasāra.

47. Mantrakaumudī

Dating — my only source here is the Muktabodha description M00229: > "The Mantrakaumudii is by Devanaatha Thakkur who was was born c. 1490 in Mithilaa where he lived and worked. … He wrote the Mantrakaumudii at the age of 75 in 1564. It mentions 99 works on Tantra."

- Why there is no researchers' opinion (the text is not mentioned in the AI's sources; the AI did not search beyond its sources): the name occurs in none of my eight works. Where Dyczkowski took these dates from, Muktabodha does not report. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

Manuscripts: not indicated in the Muktabodha header.

48. Muṇḍamālā; Hāhārāva

Muṇḍamālātantra.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 86: “As a rule, these works are of late date and seem to hail from Bengal or adjacent areas. … A more methodical treatment of the subject is found in the Muṇḍamālātantra”Tantra of the Garland of Skulls”.” [“These works” = the texts about the ten mahāvidyās; “the subject” = the doctrine of the ten mahāvidyās.]
- Muktabodha M00537/M00538: “This tantra is a different text from muṇḍamālātantra II, though they coincide in their contents and concerns and belong to the same period. A fairly late tantra.” Editor: “rasika mohana caṭṭopādhyāya”.

Hāhārāvatantra.

- Why there is no dating (the text is not mentioned in the AI’s sources; the AI did not search beyond its sources). The researchers I have worked with do not have this text. The name “hāhārāvottaraṃ tantraṃ” (“the Hāhārāvottara tantra”) occurs only in Sanderson 2009, p. 191, n. 460, in a list of tantras from the Yoginīsaṃcāra (Jayadrathayāmala, ṣaṭka 3, 1.29–42b). Whether it is the same text as our Hāhārāvatantra has not been established, and nothing is said there about the date. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

- Muktabodha M00283: “Manuscript: NGMCP 5-4798 reel number A 204/6. The Hāhārāvatantra … teaches the worship of Kaula goddesses, especially forms of Kālī, with a very clear preference for Guhyakālī.”

- Muktabodha M00283, continuation of the description (omitted in the first version: initially overlooked by the AI, added later) — indirect indications of place and time: > “Guhyakaalii is one of the most popular form of Kaalii in the Kathmandu Valley, although hardly known outside it. The main Tantra of Guhyakālī is the massive Mahākālasaṃhitā which may well have been redacted in Kathmandu Valley probably after the 14th century. It is likely that the Hāhārāvatantra is also of Nepalese as its preference for Guhyakālī suggests and absence of manuscripts or references to it outside the Valley. Another indication that this so is the presence in the text of the typical Nepalese corruption mahākarmārcana for mahaakramārcana denoting the Kaula liturgy for the worship of Kaula goddesses.”

  Note. “After the 14th century” Dyczkowski says about the Mahākālasaṃhitā, not about the Hāhārāvatantra. For the Hāhārāvatantra itself he names no date.

49. Kriyoḍḍīśa(mahātantrarāja)

Dating.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 120 (in the first version I mistakenly wrote that the name occurs only in the index; initially overlooked by the AI, added later). Goudriaan lists the versions of the Uḍḍīśa group of texts and under no. 4 names: “The Kriyoḍḍīśatantra by”Indrajit”“. About the whole group on p. 119 he writes:”a typical instance of a treatise of magic of the inferior kind, but nevertheless enjoying a great popularity all over India”.
- Why there is no dating (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): Goudriaan gives no date. The name does not occur in my other works. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

Manuscripts and editions. * Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 120, n. 36 (added in edition 2): “Ed. in 21 paṭalas by Lalmani Sarma, Bombay (Venk. Press) V.S. 1981 (A.D. 1924); 3rd ed. revised by Baladeva Prasad Miśra, A.D. 1967. For other eds., see NCC, V, p. 140; IOL-SB, II, p. 1365.” [NCC = New Catalogus Catalogorum, the consolidated catalogue of Sanskrit manuscripts, Madras; IOL-SB = the catalogue of Sanskrit printed books of the India Office Library, London.] * Muktabodha M00512: “Deals with magic rites and mantras used to control others and to protect oneself from others”. The manuscript is not indicated in the header. * The first line of the electronic text: “śrīmadindrajitpraṇītaḥ kriyoḍḍīśamahātantrarājaḥ” (“The Kriyoḍḍīśa, the great king of tantras, composed by the venerable Indrajit”).

50. Parameśvarīmata

Why there is no dating of this particular manuscript (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources). Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 has information on manuscripts under this name, but identity with our manuscript (NGMPP 5-5148) has not been established. The number of our manuscript is not named by Goudriaan. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

> Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 56, n. 95: > “Ms. III.271 from the Nepal Cat., II, p. 152 (title given there as Kubjikāmata). Its chs. XXIV–XXXIX are identical with the Ms. No. III.364 G called Parameśvarīmata (Nepal Cat., II, p. 46f., entitled Parameśvaramata) the date of which was estimated by H.P. Śāstrī to be the eleventh or twelfth cent. … A Ms. preserved in the Natl. Archives at Kathmandu (No. 1-1647/Śaivatantra 111) under the title Parameśvarīmata is composite … Another Ms. entitled Parameśvaramata is preserved in Cambridge and would according to its colophon have been written in A.D. 859 (BENDALL…).”

Manuscripts. Muktabodha M00218: “Manuscript: NGMPP manuscript 5-5148 Reel no: B 133/3”.

51. Kubjikātantra; Kulānandādi

Kubjikātantra (M00030).

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 57: “A Kubjikātantra of nine paṭalas preserved at Calcutta is a relatively late text which probably hails from Bengal.”

  Note. In our electronic text M00030 there are 17 paṭalas (the last colophon: “saptadaśaḥ paṭalaḥ” — “the seventeenth paṭala”). Goudriaan speaks of a Calcutta manuscript in 9 paṭalas, so the applicability of his assessment to M00030 is not proven.
- Muktabodha M00030: “Editor: Chatterjee. First published in the late 19th Century in Bengali characters.”

Kulānandādi (M00284).

- Muktabodha M00284: > “Manuscript: NGMCP 1-1376/v reel number A40/6. The manuscript called Kulānandādi contains short tracts and fragments of early Kaula works. The first is called Kulānanda covers the first seven folios. As it attributed to Matsyendranātha, it is important although short.”

  Further in the same description (omitted in the first version: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): > “The character and form of the exposition, which is in line with other Kaula tracts attributed to Matsyendranātha, supports the view that this is indeed an early Kaula work. The next 4 folios deal with the charateristics of a skull bowl (kapāla) which is said to be drawn from the Picumata (i.e. the Brahmayāmala) which is quite possible as this text does indeed deal with this topic. The rest of the manuscript contains prescriptions for Kaula ritual. The goddesses belong to the early period, including Kubjikā, Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī, Bhagamālinī and others. Notably Tripurā is absent, although Kāmeśvarī, one of her precursors is not.”

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 52: “Even shorter is the Kulānandatantra which deals with the obtainment of siddhis by meditation on the internal power centres”.

  N. 77 (on Bagchi’s edition): “Ed. Bagchi in the ed. of the KJN, p. 107-113. The single Ms. dates from the fourteenth or fifteenth cent. (Bagchi, o.c., p. 2).” [KJN = Kaulajñānanirṇaya.]

  Note. Whether this is the same manuscript as NGMCP 1-1376 I have not checked.
- Why there is no date of composition (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): Goudriaan dates only the manuscript, and Dyczkowski (Muktabodha) speaks only of an “early” work, without a century. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

52. Śrīvidyārṇava(tantra)

Dating.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 71: > “The Vidyārṇavatantra (VDT) by Vidyāraṇya Yati, despite the word Tantra, is a nibandha, a compilation of quotations … The author claims to be a great-grand-disciple of Śaṅkarācārya himself … This is impossible; it is even most doubtful if this Vidyāraṇya is identical with the famous Advaita philosopher of that name who flourished in the fourteenth century.”
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 142: “The Vidyārṇavatantra, in reality a nibandha, quotes at least 88 sources.”
- Why there is no dating (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources): Goudriaan only rejects the identification of the author; he gives no date of his own. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

Editions. Muktabodha M00217: “Author: śrīvidyāraṇyayati; Editor: Ram Chandra Kak; Editor: Harabhatta Shastri”.

53. Śaktisaṅgamatantra, Tārākhaṇḍa

- What it is. A large late “encyclopaedic” tantra. By tradition — 60,000 ślokas in two halves of four khaṇḍas each. The Śaktisaṅgamatantra itself (1.1.9 ff.) says that formerly the whole work was called Tantrarāja: the first half — Kādi, the second — Hādi (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 69).
- The real size (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 69) — about 9000 ślokas in four parts:
    1. Kālīkhaṇḍa — 21 chapters, 1860 ślokas;
    2. Tārākhaṇḍa — 71 chapters, 3409 ślokas;
    3. Sundarīkhaṇḍa — 21 chapters;
    4. Chinnamastākhaṇḍa — 11 chapters, about 1582 ślokas.

  The number of chapters varies in the manuscripts.
- Character (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 69). The text is eclectic, trying to harmonize both traditions (the kahādi position). Much space is given to Kālī and Tārā, who together with Tripurā form a kind of trinity. Most of it, according to the colophons, is a dialogue of Akṣobhya and Tārā. The text speaks of geography, of the history of religions (non-tantric schools are also mentioned, e.g. the Jainas and the Vaikhānasas) and, of course, of tantric ritual. Because of its encyclopaedic character it is valuable as a source.
- Date (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 69):
    - B. Bhaṭṭācāryya (edition, vol. I, p. VI) — between ca. 1555 and 1607;
    - V. V. Dviveda — AD 1645;
    - Goudriaan: both dates are unreliable, but the last part of the 16th or the first half of the 17th century “cannot be far of the mark” (translation: “cannot be wide of the truth”).

Acquaintance with the western and southern sects points to the area south of the Vindhya mountains.

- Editions (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 67, n. 41). Bhaṭṭācāryya published three volumes in the GOS (Gaekwad's Oriental Series, Baroda): Kālīkhaṇḍa (1932), Tārākhaṇḍa (1941), Sundarīkhaṇḍa (1947). The fourth volume was published by Dviveda (1979). Our e-text is vol. II, the Tārākhaṇḍa (Muktabodha M00119).
- The frame of the e-text. The colophon: "śrīśaktisaṅgamamahātantrarāje uttarabhāge dvitīyakhaṇḍe śrīmadakṣobhyamahogratārāsaṃvāde …" (translation: "in the honoured Śaktisaṅgama, the great king of tantras, in the latter half, in the second khaṇḍa, in the conversation of the honoured Akṣobhya and Mahogra-Tārā …").
- The size of the e-text. The last colophon is the 47th paṭala. Note. Goudriaan gives 71 chapters; why there are 47 in the e-text, I have not checked (initially overlooked by the AI, added later).
- Of what it consists (the paṭala titles of the e-text M00119):
  - 1 — terms (paribhāṣā); 2 — the hymn at the consecration (abhiṣekastuti);
  - 4 — the definition of āmnāya; 5 — brahmavīrāyoga;
  - 7–8 — the maṇḍala and the siddhis of the yakṣiṇī; 9 — the "exposition of the seats/postures" (āsanakathana);
  - 12 — bhūtaśuddhi; 13 — the kaula tīrthas; 14 — the worship of Śakti; 15 — gavākṣayoga; 16 — navarātra;
  - 20–29 — the order of worship of the Mahāvidyās and of other goddesses: the ten vidyās, mahācīnakrama, Gandharva, Chinnamastā, Bagalā, Mahārāja, Bhuvaneśvarī, Kamalā, Dhūmāvatī, brahmamārga;
  - 32–36 — the conventional signs of the mudrā, of drinking, of the latā ("creepers", i.e. the female partners), the night pūjā;
  - 37 — the secret of the Śaktisaṅgama; 38 — vīrasādhana; 39 — muṇḍāsana (the seat of skulls);
  - 40–41 — the rosary; 44 — the sādhana of Sundarī; 45 — ritual impurity (sūtaka); 46 — the rules of the japa; 47 — "aśvāsana" (Note. the meaning of the title unchecked).
- Postures: vīrāsanaṃ … mahāvīrāsanaṃ, pañcavīrāsana (Śaktisaṃgamatantra tārākhanda: Muktabodha e-text no. M00119, typed from the edition: editor baṭṭācārya b; Baroda Oriental Institute, Baroda, 1941; line numbers in that file: 1475–1611, 4107, 4122). In the śākta context vīrāsana often means the seat of the hero, e.g. on a corpse. See Part IV, § 3.6.

54. Mahānirvāṇatantra; Kulamuktikallolinī

Mahānirvāṇatantra.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, pp. 98–99: > "The Mahānirvāṇatantra (MNT) is at present probably the most widely known original Tantra. It is also perhaps the youngest, because it can almost with certainty be dated in the second half of the eighteenth century. It is not mentioned in earlier texts or lists; the number of Mss. is limited; its only commentary, an unpretentious product by Hariharānanda Bhāratī, guru of Rammohan Roy, dates from the nineteenth century."

N. 26 summarizes the opinions: Farquhar — 18th c.; Derrett — "between 1773 and 1780"; Bharati — without argumentation "usually ascribed to the eleventh century" and "probably written in the seventh century".

N. 27 — on the manuscripts: "About six of these are noted in the catalogues. The Nepalese Ms. mentioned by Avalon, The Great Liberation, p. VIII, is almost certainly non-existent (cf. DERRETT…)."

- Muktabodha M00049: "mahānirvānatantra with the commentary of hariharānanda bharati; Editor: arthur avalon".

Kulamuktikallolinī.

- Muktabodha M00318, Dyczkowski's description: > "The author of the Kulamuktikallolinī is Navamīsiṃha also called Adyananda. He introduces himself in the beginning of his Tantracintāmaṇi … as the minister of King Bhūpālendra of Nepal … He was probably king Mahīndra Malla or Bhūpālendra Malla of Kathmandu who ruled for about five years between 1689-1694 ce."
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 146: "Navamīsiṃha also produced the Kulamuktikallolinī in about 9000 ślokas dealing with"Tantra worship in general, with special reference to Kālī"".
- Manuscripts (Muktabodha M00318): "Manuscript: NGMCP Manuscript No.: 1-1675 Reel No.: B 120/6".

D. Paddhatis (manuals)

Paddhatis, unlike the tantras, are authored works, so their datings are more reliable.

55. Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati

Dating.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 128 — the only relative anchoring, in the section on Nārāyaṇa's Tantrasārasaṃgraha: > "It belongs to the South; its author is believed to have flourished in Kerala in the fifteenth or the sixteenth century. … From a comparison with the second book (Mantrapāda) of the Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati one learns that the Tantrasārasaṃgraha from ch. XI onwards is very probably a recast of that Mantrapāda. The reverse is true for the chs. I–X; here Nārāyaṇa's work offers the more complete version which has been abridged under Īśānaśiva's name as chs. XXXIX and XL of the Mantrapāda."

Note. It follows (this is my conclusion): at least chapters XXXIX–XL of the Mantrapāda of the Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati in the transmitted form are not earlier than Nārāyaṇa (15th–16th c.). About the dating of the rest of the text this says nothing.

- Bang 2018, p. 362 (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): the Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati is called “the late Saiddhāntika ritual manual”. Bang gives no absolute date.
- Kafle 2015, p. 35: “Īśānagurudevapaddhati 26:56–63” — among the parallels in texts “unquestionably younger than the Niśvāsamukha”.
- Why there is no absolute date (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the needed work is not accessible to the AI; the AI did not search beyond its sources). None of my works gives it. According to the bibliographies of Törzsök 1999 and Bang 2018, the 1990 reprint is supplied with “a substantial new introduction … by N. P. Unni”, but the AI does not have this introduction, and I did not try to obtain it. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

Editions.

- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati (Siddhāntasāra) of Īśānaśiva, ed. T. Gaṇapati Śāstrī. 4 parts. Trivandrum Sanskrit Series 60, 72, 77, and 83.”
- Bang 2018 (bibliography): “Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati of Īśānaśivagurudeva, ed. T. Gaṇapati Śāstrī, 4 vols. Delhi: Bharatiya Vidya Prakashan, 1990. (reprinted, but with a substantial new introduction date to 1987 by N. P. Unni, from Trivandrum Sanskrit Series nos. 69, 72, 77 and 83…”.

  Note. The number of the first volume of the series is 60 in Sanderson 2009, but 69 in Bang 2018 and Törzsök 1999.
- Muktabodha M00016: “Volume 1 of 4 volume edition by University of Trivandrum, Gov. of Travancore, 1921”. M00017 and M00018 are volumes 2 and 3, 1922.

  Note. The header of M00233 says “Volume 3 of 4”, although by its title it is volume 4.

56. Kriyākramadyotikā (Aghoraśiva)

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663: “Aghoraśiva, who completed his Kriyākramadyotikā in 1157 … for confirmation of the date of Aghoraśiva’s Kriyākramadyotikā see GOODALL 1998, pp. xiii–xvii, fn. 24.”
- Goodall 2004, p. lviii: Aghoraśiva “flourished in the middle of the twelfth century”.

Editions. Muktabodha M00126: “Transcribed from a 1927 cidambaram edition in Grantha script supplied by Richard Davis.” Why there is no information on manuscripts (the AI did not search beyond its sources): they are not described in my works.

57. Somaśambhupaddhati, vyākhyā (M00220)

Dating.

- The author of the commentary. Muktabodha does not name him. In the bibliography of Sanderson 2009 this transcript is ascribed to Trilocanaśiva: “Somaśambhupaddhativyākhyā of Trilocanaśiva. IFP MS Transcripts 457 and 170.” Our electronic text is made from T0170.
- The colophons of the electronic text itself (added at the final check): “iti trilocanaśivācāryaviracitāyāṃ kriyākāṇḍakramāvalīṭīkāyāṃ nityakarmavidhiḥ samāptaḥ” (“thus, in the commentary on the Kriyākāṇḍakramāvalī composed by Trilocanaśivācārya, the rule of the daily rite is concluded”, Somaśambhupaddhativyākhyā: Muktabodha e-text no. M00220, typed from the manuscript: IFP transcript T0170; line numbers in that file: 2218–2219; likewise lines 3291, 3396 and 4283 of the same file). This confirms the ascription of Sanderson 2009. Note. The last colophon of the electronic text (lines 5963–5964 of the same file) is corrupted and names a “spaṣṭabodhinī” and a “tryaṃbakaśambhu”; I have not sought an explanation.
- Trilocanaśiva:
    - Sanderson 2009, p. 110: “in the twelfth century the South-Indian Saiddhāntika Trilocanaśiva tells us that his preceptorial line descends from a Dharmaśambhu…”;
    - Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 663: Jñānaśiva is “a teacher of Trilocanaśiva and therefore a near contemporary of Aghoraśiva” (1157).
- The commented text. Somaśambhu wrote his Paddhati “in the eleventh century, probably in 1073” (Sanderson 2009, p. 65).

Manuscripts. Muktabodha M00220: “Manuscript: IFP transcript T0170”.

58. Śivārcanacandrikā (Appaya Dīkṣita)

Why there is no dating (the text is not mentioned in the AI’s sources; the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the AI did not search beyond its sources).

- Appaya Dīkṣita as an author is not mentioned at all in my eight works. There are no dates for him there, and in other literature the AI did not search for them.

- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 (p. 148) describes a work of the same name by another author (added in edition 2: initially overlooked by the AI, added later): > “The Śivārcanacandrikā by Śrīnivāsa Bhaṭṭa, whose religious name was Vidyānandanātha, deals, in 46 chapters, not only with the worship of Śiva but also with that of Gaṇeśa, Durgā, Viṣṇu and Sūrya — the"Smārta" series."

Goudriaan does not give the date of Śrīnivāsa Bhaṭṭa. He names only his teacher — Sundarācārya (Saccidānandanātha) of Jalandhara (Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 151).

Note. Muktabodha ascribes our electronic text to Appaya Dīkṣita. Whether this is the same text as the one described by Goudriaan, or another of the same name, I have not checked.

Editions. Muktabodha M00079: "Author: appayadīkṣita. E-text transcribed from the Devakottai series."

59. Siddhāntasārapaddhati (Bhojadeva)

Dating.

- Sanderson 2009, p. 55: "the Siddhāntasārapaddhati of Mahārājādhirāja Bhojadeva of Dhārā (r. c. 1018–1060)".
- Sanderson 2009, p. 56, n. 39: "For some detailed evidence of the dependence of the Somaśambhupaddhati on the Siddhāntasārapaddhati see SANDERSON 2005a". Hence the Siddhāntasārapaddhati is older than Somaśambhu's Paddhati.

Manuscripts.

- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): > "A = NAK MS 1-1363, NGMPP B28/29: palm-leaf; old Newari script; A.D. 1077/8; B = NAK MS 5-743, NGMPP B28/19: palm-leaf; old Newari script; A.D. 1111/2."

  The same data are in the bibliography of Bang 2018. Bang 2018, p. 19, on manuscript B28-19: "this is one of the two extant manuscripts of Bhojadeva's Siddhāntasārapaddhati".

- Muktabodha M00531: > "Author: bhojadeva ascribed to. Manuscript: NGMCP 5-743/vi 203 Reel no: B 28/19. From an old palm leaf manuscript from Nepal which though undated indicates the texts early date."

  [= śaivatantra.] In the same place: "If the text was indeed compiled in the 11th century, then this is a rare example of an early śaiva liturgical manual."

  Note. Muktabodha calls the manuscript "undated", while Sanderson gives manuscript B (NAK 5-743, B28/19 — the same number) the date 1111/2.

E. Outside the scope (not tantras and not āgamas) — parallels

60. Pāśupatasūtra with the Pañcārthabhāṣya of Kauṇḍinya

Dating.

- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: the Pāśupatasūtra — “2nd century CE”; the Pañcārthabhāṣya — “4th century CE”.
- Törzsök 1999, p. vii, n. 29: > “The date may be established on the basis that all tantric literature must postdate the Pāśupatas including Kauṇḍinya, who is hypothetically placed in the fourth century. However, since Kauṇḍinya’s dating has not been established with certainty, this terminus post quem is very speculative.”
- Kafle 2015, p. 33: the Niśvāsamukha paraphrases the Pāśupatasūtra; therefore “The latter text, therefore, certainly precedes the former.”

Editions. GRETIL sa_pAzupatasUtra-comm: “Based on the edition by R. Anantakrishna Shastri. Trivandrum: The Oriental Manuscripts Library of the University of Travancore, 1940 (Trivandrum Sanskrit Series; 143). Input by Oliver Hellwig”. Why there is no information on manuscripts (the AI did not search beyond its sources): they are not described in my works.

61. Tirumantiram (Tamil)

Dating. Opinions diverge sharply:

- Sanderson 2009, p. 287: > “That text has been assigned to the fifth, sixth, and seventh centuries. But it weaves together the Tamil Śaiva Siddhānta, the Vedānta, a Śākta tradition that features kuṇḍalinīyogaḥ and the cult of Tripurā, and the cult of Naṭarāja. This is a combination which is unlikely to predate the twelfth century (see also GOODALL 2004, pp. xxix–xxx).”
- Goudriaan & Gupta 1981, p. 13, n. 58: “This number already in Tirumūlar’s Tirumantiram, perhaps of the seventh cent. A.D. (GONDA, MRL, p. 180).” [“This number” = the 28 āgamas.]
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: the Tirumantiram is placed in the “14th century CE”.

Source of the text: Tamil Wikisource. Why there is no information on manuscripts (the AI did not search beyond its sources): they are not described in my works.

62. Skandapurāṇa; Triśikhibrāhmaṇopaniṣad

Skandapurāṇa (the early one, the Ambikākhaṇḍa).

- Sanderson 2009, p. 51: “the Skandapurāṇa-Ambikākhaṇḍa, whose earliest surviving manuscript was completed in 810”.

In n. 23 Sanderson explains the conversion of the date: “The oldest manuscript is dated in the year 234. For this date and its equivalence to A.D. 810 see ADRIAENSEN, BAKKER and ISAACSON 1994, p. 326.”

- Kafle 2015, p. 32: Bakker admits “that the Mūlasūtra and the Skandapurāṇa may have evolved around the same period”.
- Mallinson & Singleton 2017, Timeline: “7th–10th century CE — Early Purāṇas: Skanda…”.
- Why there is no date of composition (the researchers mention the text but do not give the needed information; the needed works are not accessible to the AI): my works give only the date of the manuscript and a relative anchoring. The works Adriaensen–Bakker–Isaacson and Bakker 2014 are not in the AI’s possession; I did not try to obtain them.
- Manuscripts and editions (Sanderson 2009, bibliography):
    - “Skandapurāṇa-Ambikākhaṇḍa. NAK MS 2–229, NGMPP B11/4: palm-leaf; Licchavi script; A.D. 810.”
    - Editions: Bhaṭṭarāī, Kathmandu 1988; adhyāyas 1–25 — Adriaensen, Bakker, Isaacson 1998.

  Note. From which edition Kafle quotes 179.40cd I have not checked.

Triśikhibrāhmaṇopaniṣad.

- Why there is no dating (the text is not mentioned in the AI’s sources; the AI did not search beyond its sources): the name occurs in none of my eight works (search for “triśikhi” with variants). The text is known to me only from the quotation in Kafle in my catalogue of postures. Other literature was not searched by the AI.

F. Needed but not yet verified at all

63. Raurava

Dating.

- Goodall 2004, pp. xliv–xlvi. Goodall distinguishes the early Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha and the late “kriyāpāda”: > “my own position is that the many quotations attributed to the Raurava in the works of early Saiddhāntika authors (i.e. up to and including the twelfth-century Aghoraśiva and his immediate disciples) that are to be traced to the Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha demonstrate that the Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha was the early Raurava known to those authors. These same early authors do not quote from the corpus that has been published as the ‘kriyāpāda’ of the Raurava…”

And on p. xlvi: “the earliest now surviving Raurava is almost certainly the body of chapters transmitted to us of the Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha”.

- Goodall 2004, pp. xliv–xlv — the opposite position: Dagens and Barazer-Billoret (2000) consider the “kriyāpāda” more ancient. Goodall argues with them.
- Sanderson 2009, p. 279, n. 662: the Raurava is in the list of texts first quoted by Vedajñānaguru II (16th c.). Evidently the South Indian Raurava is meant.
- Sanderson 2009, pp. 286–287: the Raurava is an example of the late “Śāktism” (see no. 31).

Manuscripts and editions.

- Sanderson 2009 (bibliography): “Rauravāgama, ed. N. R. Bhatt. 3 Vols. Publications de l’IFI 18.1–3. Pondicherry: IFI, 1961, 1972, 1988” [IFI = Institut français d’Indologie — the former name of the French Institute of Pondicherry]; “Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha. Published in volume 1 of Rauravāgama.”
- Goodall 2004, p. xxxv: the Mysore codex MS P 258 is “the codex unicus for much of the Rauravasūtrasaṃgraha”. In n. 49: “A handful of South Indian manuscripts transmit up to 4:41 but no further.”

G. Summary table

The table contains only what has been quoted verbatim above. Where there is no date, instead of a dash the reason is indicated (in detail — § 0.4):

The mark “added later” means information that the AI initially missed and added in the second edition.

Summary. Nearly all the gaps in the datings are gaps of my (the AI’s) searching, not a proven absence of the information in scholarship. I worked only with eight studies. I did not try to obtain most of the works listed above. Two attempts (Hatley 2018, Sanderson 2014) ended with a server error or a login requirement.

Part IV. Postures (āsana and related terms) in Śaiva and Śākta tantras and āgamas

A corpus of quotations verified against primary sources.

> The extended context of each quotation is in Part V. There, for every passage that has an e-text, a full stanza is given, the two stanzas before and after it, the chapter, and a summary of the situation in which the posture is mentioned.

How it was collected. I ran regular expressions over 188 IAST e-texts (some files were excluded later; the working corpus now holds 177): the complete IAST library of Muktabodha (catalogue numbers M00…) and the GRETIL texts (`sa_*.txt`). That gave 6,127 matches; a strict filter then left 2,651 lines (postures by name, āsanaṃ baddhvā, ṛjukāya / samakāya, karaṇa, pīṭha, paryaṅka, utkuṭuka, etc.). Every passage below has been read in its context. Quotations are given exactly as they stand in the e-text, together with the misprints of the transcriptions; [sic] is added only where a misprint hinders understanding. For each quotation the text, the verse number in the e-text's numbering, and the file and line are stated (in the compendium, as a link to the file itself; for how to read such links, see the Introduction, § 6).

How the passage type is stated. After the link to each passage it is spelled out in words what it is: a yogic or ritual posture, only a posture's name or its description, iconography (how a deity sits), or a term that is not a posture. The sign ⚠ means that the information comes only from scholarly literature and that the primary source is not in my corpus.

> The signs (Sanskrit known only from a quotation in a scholarly work), (only the translation is known) and ⚠ in this catalogue are UNCLOSED gaps. A passage with such a sign has been checked against the primary source as far as is publicly possible, but it cannot be finally closed until the customer sends: (A1) the volume Goodall et al. 2015 (the critical text and translation of the Nayasūtra of the Niśvāsa), (A2) ~~the manuscript of the Jayadrathayāmala, ṣaṭka 4~~ — CLOSED 17 Oct 2026: the e-text M00681 of precisely the manuscript NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 1-1468 was obtained (the passage "4.2.612–622" is closed, see § 10.3), (A3) an e-text of the Tantrasadbhāva (chapters 16 and 27 are needed). The full list is in Appendix A. Until they arrive, these points remain open (unclosed) questions; the sign stands next to them throughout the text.

The translations are literal and working ones; where I am unsure of a reading, the sign (?) is given.

1. Early and “classical” Śaiva tantras (Mantramārga)

1.1. Svacchandatantra (GRETIL GRETIL file sa_svacchandatantra; Muktabodha M00091, with Kṣemarāja’s commentary Uddyota)

Svacchandatantra 7.290ab–291ab — the yoga chapter, after the choice of place (7.287–289). Yogic posture; name only. e-text of the GRETIL library (University of Göttingen), file sa_svacchandatantra.txt, keyed from the editions of Dwivedi and of the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, by chapters; input by members of the Śaiva reading group of the École française d’Extrême-Orient in Pondicherry (per the file header); line numbers in that file: 4923–4926 > pūrvācāryān namaskṛtya yukto dhyānaparāyaṇaḥ / > āsanaṃ svastikaṃ baddhvā padmakaṃ bhadram eva vā // SvaT_7.290 > sāpāśrayaṃ sārdhacandraṃ yogapaṭṭaṃ yathāsukham …

“Having bowed to the former teachers, composed, intent on meditation, having assumed the svastika, padmaka or bhadra posture, the ‘with support’, the ‘with the half-moon’ (ardhacandra), the yogapaṭṭa, or as is comfortable…”

Kṣemarāja, Uddyota on 7.290–291 (Svacchandatantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00091; per the file header, the e-text was produced by Muktabodha software from the Devanagari computer input prepared by Dr S. Malaviya; line numbers in that file: 24739–24745) gives the definitions. With a description. * padmakaṃ = padmāsana: «ūrunyastottānapādatalam» — “the soles of the feet turned upwards and placed on the thighs”. * svastika: «paryaṅkasthasya jaṃghāvyatyāsāt» — “of one sitting in paryaṅka, through crossing the shanks”. * bhadra: «samapādasthityā» — “by standing with the feet even (symmetrical)”. * sāpāśraya: «bhittyāśrayāt» — “through support against a wall”; and he specifies: «etac cārdhacandraviśeṣaṇam» — “and this qualifies ardhacandra”. * ardhacandra: «bhūmiṣṭhaikacaraṇorupṛṣṭhanyastottānadvitīyacaraṇam» — “one foot on the ground, the other placed sole-upwards on the top of the thigh”. * yogapaṭṭa: «yogārthaṃ paṭṭaparikarabandhāya» — “[a band] for the sake of yoga, for binding with a strap around [the body]”; then: «baddhvā etadanyatamamāsanam» — “having assumed one of these postures”. * yathāsukham: «anyad api vā yad yat sukhaṃ śarīrapariklеśakṛn na bhavati» — “or any other posture that is comfortable and does not torment the body”. There follows a quotation of Yogasūtra 2.46 sthirasukham āsanam.

Verses with translation: Svacchandatantra 7.290–291 and Kṣemarāja's commentary on them

The text of the stanzas is from the GRETIL file (where words are written joined, as in the manuscript tradition: pūrvācāryānnamaskṛtya). Kṣemarāja's commentary (Uddyota) is from the Muktabodha file M00091, lines 24739–24746, where it is printed from the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies edition. Stanzas 7.287–289 before this passage speak of choosing the place for yoga; stanza 7.292 continues: "both the outer and the inner 'equipment' (sakalīkaraṇa), then the inner worship".

Word-by-word gloss

пӯрва-āчāрйāн — of the former (ancient) teachers; намаскṛтйа — having bowed; йуктаḥ — composed, concentrated (lit. "yoked", i.e. engaged in yoga); дхйāна-парāйаṇаḥ — wholly devoted to meditation; āсанам — posture (acc.); свастикам — svastika (the "well-being" posture); баддхвā — having bound, i.e. assumed (of a posture); падмакам — padmaka ("lotus"); бхадрам — bhadra ("auspicious"); ева вā — or else.

са-апāш́райам — "with support"; са-ардхачандрам — "with the half-moon" (see the note); йогапаṭṭам — yogapaṭṭa ("yogic band"); йатхā-сукхам — as is comfortable; дахана-утпӯйане — burning and "scattering" (two stages of the mental purification of the body, see the note); кṛтвā — having done; плāвайет — let him flood, wash over; амṛтена — with the nectar of immortality (amṛta); ча — and.

падмакам — padmaka; ӯру-нйаста-уттāна-пāда-талам — [the posture] in which the upward-turned soles of the feet are placed on the thighs; падмāсана-āкхйам — called padmāsana; парйанька-стхасйа — of one sitting in paryaṅka (see the note); джаṃгхā-вйатйāсāт — through crossing of the shanks; свастикам — svastika; сама-пāда-стхитйā — by the position with evenly placed feet; бхадрам — bhadra; бхитти-āш́райāт — through support against a wall; сāпāш́райам — "with support"; етат — this; ча — and; ардхачандра-виш́ешаṇам — qualification of [the word] ardhacandra; бхӯми-шṭха-ека-чараṇа-ӯру-пṛшṭха-нйаста-уттāна-двитӣйа-чараṇам — [the posture] in which one foot stands on the ground and the second foot is placed sole-upwards on the upper side of the thigh; ардхачандрам — ardhacandra ("half-moon"); йога-артхам — for the sake of yoga; паṭṭа-парикара-бандхāйа — for binding with a strap made of a band (paṭṭa); баддхвā — having assumed; етат-анйатамам — one of these; āсанам — postures; анйат апи вā — or else another; йат йат сукхам — whatever is comfortable; ш́арӣра-париклеш́а-кṛт — causing torment to the body; на бхавати — is not; йатхā уктам — as is said; ш́тхира-сукхам

[so in the file, read стхира-] — steady and comfortable; āсанам — posture; пāта0 2-46 — Patañjali, [Yogasūtra] 2.46; ити — thus (end of quotation).

Literal translation

7.290–291. Having bowed to the former teachers, composed, wholly devoted to meditation, having assumed a posture — the svastika, the padmaka or else the bhadra, — the “with support”, the “with the half-moon”, the yogapaṭṭa, as is comfortable, — having performed the burning and the scattering, let him flood [the body] with the nectar of immortality.

Commentary. Padmaka: [the posture] in which the upward-turned soles of the feet are placed on the thighs, called padmāsana; of one sitting in paryaṅka — through the crossing of the shanks — the svastika; in the position with evenly placed feet — the bhadra; through support against a wall — the “with support”, and this qualifies ardhacandra; [the posture] in which one foot stands on the ground and the second foot is placed sole-upwards on the upper side of the thigh — the ardhacandra; “yogapaṭṭa” — for the sake of yoga, for binding with a strap made of a band; having assumed one of these postures or else another — whatever is comfortable and does not torment the body. As is said: “A posture is steady and comfortable” (Patañjali 2.46).

Smooth translation

7.290–291. Having bowed to the ancient teachers, composed and intent on meditation, the yogin assumes one of the postures — the svastika, the lotus (padmaka) or the bhadra — or the half-moon with support, or sits with the yogic band, or as is comfortable for him. Then he mentally burns the body, scatters the ashes and bathes it with the nectar of immortality.

Commentary. Padmaka is padmāsana: the soles turned upwards lie on the thighs. Svastika is when the seated one crosses the shanks. Bhadra is when the feet are placed evenly. “With support” means “leaning against a wall”, and that word belongs to the half-moon. The half-moon (ardhacandra): one foot stands on the ground, the other lies sole-upwards on the thigh. Yogapaṭṭa is a band with which one binds the body for yoga. One may assume one of these postures or any other, provided it is comfortable and does not torment the body. As Patañjali says: “The posture should be steady and comfortable” (Yogasūtra 2.46).

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; it has not been collated with the published translation.
- sārdhacandraṃ = sa-ardhacandraṃ “with the half-moon”, i.e. “together with the ardhacandra”. From the single stanza it is not clear whether it lists three separate postures (sāpāśraya, ardhacandra, yogapaṭṭa) or whether “with support” belongs to the next word. Kṣemarāja chooses the second: sāpāśraya “with support” qualifies ardhacandra — the “ardhacandra leaning against a wall”. In the smooth translation I follow Kṣemarāja.

- paryaṅkasthasya in Kṣemarāja: paryaṅka usually means a “couch” or a specific posture (sitting with a strap). Here, judging by the context, it is simply “one who is seated”; it cannot be defined more precisely from this passage.
- utpūyana: Kṣemarāja himself explains this word in his commentary on 2.37–38 of the same tantra (Muktabodha M00091, file lines 2031–2032): utpūyanamutplavanam, pluṣṭasyāpi dehābhimānasya saṃskāraśeṣasya vāyavyā dhāraṇayaiva nirdhūnanam — “utpūyana is ‘sweeping out’ (utplavana): the shaking off, by means of the fixation on wind alone, of the residue of impressions from the already burnt identification of oneself with the body”. Stanza 2.38 (sa_svacchandatantra : 437) says that utpūyana is performed with the syllable of wind. Hence my translation “scattering”.
- In file M00091 the stanzas are printed with separation as bhadrameva vā || 7-290 ||; the text agrees with the GRETIL file. In the Yogasūtra quotation the file has śthira- with a superfluous quotation mark; the correct reading is sthirasukham āsanam (Yogasūtra 2.46). I have kept the file’s spelling.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

The first line coincides verbatim with Niśvāsa Nayasūtra 4.14ab, which precedes the posture list (see § 11). The Svacchanda borrows this passage but puts the single word sukhāsīnaḥ in place of the posture list. Kṣemarāja (Muktabodha M00091, file line 48864) explains sukhāsīnaḥ thus: sukhāsīno viditavedyatvāt prāṇāyāmādyāyāsarahitaḥ — “sitting comfortably, i.e. free from the exertions of prāṇāyāma and the rest, since he has cognised the cognisable”. * Svacchandatantra 4.365–367 — karaṇa. “Then, having performed the karaṇa — hear its marks: the tongue is to be applied to the palate, a little higher it does not touch; slightly opening the mouth, the lips barely do not touch, and likewise the rows of teeth; the gaze — neither down nor up; … making the body upright — this is called the divine karaṇa”. Literal translation

7.12–13ab. The foot brought to the left knee, both arms hanging down behind the back, both eyes distorted, the neck “broken”, the tongue stuck out: desired by the whole host of yogins, dear — [this] is considered the yogīśvarī [mudrā].

7.13cd–14. Both hands, turned downwards, let the wise one lead from the feet to the heart; [then] across, up to the mouth (?), above — turned toward each other, directed upwards let him lead: it is known as the mahāmudrā in the rite of purifying the body.

Smooth translation

7.12–13ab. One foot is brought to the left knee, the arms are hung down behind the back, the eyes are rolled up, the neck is bent sharply, the tongue is stuck out. This is the yogīśvarī mudrā, beloved of all yogins.

7.13cd–14. The wise one moves the hands palms-down from the feet to the heart, and further, turning them palms toward each other and fingers up, raises them higher. This is the mahāmudrā, known in the rite of purifying the body.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; it has not been collated with published translations (e.g. Vasudeva 2004).
- Which foot is brought to the left knee the text does not say; by sense it is the right one, but that is an inference, not the text’s words.
- padbhyāṃ is a dual, “by the feet” or “from the feet”. One can understand that the hands are moved by the feet, and that is how this passage was paraphrased above in the catalogue: “the hands are set in motion by the feet”. Or one can understand “from the feet to the heart”. The second seems simpler to me, but the grammar allows both.
- tiryagmukhāntamupari — the sense is unclear. A possible parsing: tiryak “across” + mukha-antam “up to the mouth” (or “to the end of the face”) + upari “above”. The translation is tentative.

уччарет — let him utter; кшурикā-мӯле — at the base of the kṣurikā (“little knife”, see the note); грантхи-чхедам — the cutting of the knot; бхавет — will occur; кшаṇāт — instantly; гхāṭайитвā — having “closed” or “opened” (sense unclear, see the note); ту — and; двāрāṇи — the doors, orifices; нитйам ева — constantly; самабхйасет — let him practise.

Literal translation

23.113. Let him cut the knot — the support of the jīva: this is the mark of utkrānti. The anus, the sex organ, and also the navel, the mouth, the nose, the ears and the eyes —

23.114. in these places, having applied a bolt, let him direct the key upwards. The bolts — by instruction. Hear what the procedure is like.

23.115. Having placed oneself above the support-anus, having made the cock posture, with feet, thighs and shanks level, and the elbows above them,

23.116. with “broken” back, head and shoulders, abiding with the face thrown upwards, with the two fists let him press the shoulders; and the two throat and nasal ones (?) —

23.117. let him utter at the base of the “little knife”: the cutting of the knot will occur instantly. Having “closed” (?) the doors, let him practise constantly.

Smooth translation

23.113–114. Utkrānti is the cutting of the knot in which the soul is held. The anus, the sex organ, the navel, the mouth, the nose, the ears and the eyes are “doors”: “bolts” are laid on them, and the “key” is directed upwards. How to set the bolts is learnt from the teacher. And now hear how the procedure is done.

23.115–117. Sitting on the perineum in the cock posture, so that the feet, thighs and shanks are level and the elbows above them, bending the back, head and shoulders and throwing the face upwards, the yogin presses the shoulders with his fists and utters at the “base of the knife” the throat and nasal [sounds]. Then the knot is cut instantly. Having closed the “doors”, one should practise this constantly.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the GRETIL e-text; it has not been collated with the edition of Goudriaan & Schoterman 1988 or with translations.
- eṣu sthāne ’rgalaṃ yojya: the pronoun stands in the plural while “place” is singular; yojya instead of the classical yojayitvā. Such deviations from classical grammar are usual for this tantra. I translate by sense.
- kaṇṭhasthau cānunāsikau — masculine dual. Two understandings are possible: (1) it qualifies skandhau “shoulders” — but “shoulders situated in the throat, and nasal ones” makes no sense; (2) it is the object of uccaret “let him utter” in the next stanza, i.e. “two sounds — a throat one (?) and a nasal one”. The second is more likely, but which sounds exactly are meant is not clear from the text.
- kṣurikā literally means “little knife”. What it is here — a mantra name, a point of the body or a technique — cannot be established from this passage.
- ghāṭayitvā: a form from the root ghaṭ “to join”, hence “having closed”. But 23.112 nearby has codghāṭanaṃ (ca udghāṭanam “and opening”), so “having opened” is also possible. I leave the question open.

  "'in a good posture' — that is, abiding in a yogic posture such as padma, svastika, ardhacandra, etc., the marks of which are taught in other āgamas". This shows that in the Mṛgendra āsana is not singled out as a separate limb of yoga (which agrees with the preface of the IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) edition), but the posture is described through the alignment of the body.

Verses with translation: Mṛgendra, Yogapāda 17–20 (= MT_4.17–20 in the GRETIL file) and Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha's commentary on them

The stanzas are from the GRETIL file (keyed from the editions of Madhusudan Kaul Shastri 1930 and N. R. Bhatt 1962). Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha's commentary (vṛtti) is from the Muktabodha file M00037. Before this passage (4.16) the rinsing of the mouth and touching the parts of the body are taught; after it (4.20–21) — the exhalation recaka and its fruits.

Literal translation

4.17. Healthy, whose food is wholesome and digested, in a house surrounded by three walls, or in a forest etc., free from disturbance, abiding in a good posture (on a good seat), facing north,

4.18. having bowed to Maheśāna, Umā, Skanda and the lord of the gaṇas, with neck, head and chest straight, having directed both eyes at the tip of the nose,

4.19. with the heels protecting the testicles, the teeth not touching the teeth, with a firmly held body, having placed the tongue at the tips of the teeth, steadily established,

4.20. let him exhale the air with one nostril up to śakti. This is recaka; from the practice of it, in the acts of “piercing” and “casting off” … (continued in 4.21: “he gradually acquires the ability even with regard to distant objects”).

Commentary. “Hita” — without pain; “jīrṇe” — when digestion is attained; he whose food is such is thus. “Healthy” — precisely for that reason, through the equilibrium of the elements of the body etc. In a house surrounded by three walls/ramparts, noiseless, or free from disturbance; or in a forest, in a mountain cave etc.; — since [that] is a cause of comfortable abiding, — on a “good”, that is beautiful, seat covered with cloth, a skin, etc. — on a bench, a plank, etc. — abiding; or else: he who through practice abides in a “good”, that is serving as the cause of steadiness and comfort, yogic posture — such as padma, svastika, ardhacandra, etc., the marks of which are taught in other āgamas — is “abiding in a good posture”. Facing north. Having bowed to the Highest Lord, the Goddess, Guha and Gaṇeśa. With throat, head and chest clearly [erect]; with the gaze placed on the tip of his own nose; with the upper and lower rows of teeth kept apart; with the heels holding back the pressing of the testicles [and] their springing up by the force of the jolt (udghāta); with an unbent body, steadily established; having placed the tongue at the tip of the teeth; according to his power — with the right nostril let him exhale the air in order to purify the channels (nāḍī) inside the body, [that is] let him cast it out.

Smooth translation

The yogin should be healthy and eat wholesome, well-digested food. He sits in a house enclosed on three sides by walls, or in a forest where nothing disturbs him, on a comfortable seat, in a good posture, facing north. Having bowed to Śiva, Umā, Skanda and Gaṇeśa, he keeps his neck, head and chest straight, looks at the tip of the nose, shields the testicles with his heels, does not clench his teeth, keeps the body unmoved, and the tongue at the tips of the teeth. Sitting steadily, he exhales the air with one nostril to the limit. That is recaka.

The commentator explains the “good posture” in two ways: it is either a comfortable seat — a bench or a plank covered with cloth or a skin — or a habitual, steady and comfortable yogic posture: padma, svastika, ardhacandra and others, the marks of which are taught in other āgamas. In his words, the heels keep the testicles from being pressed and from springing up from the jolt of air, and the exhalation is to be done through the right nostril as long as one's strength holds, in order to purify the channels of the body.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-texts; it has not been collated with published translations.
- svāsanastha: in writing it is not clear whether it is sva-āsana ("one's own posture") or su-āsana ("good posture"). The commentator both times explains through suṣṭhu "well", i.e. he reads su-āsana. Therefore in Part IV the translation "in his own posture" was replaced by "in a good posture".
- Variants between the two e-texts: GRETIL ṛjugrīvāśirovakṣā — M00037 ṛjugrīvaśirovakṣāḥ; GRETIL viṣṭabhadeho — M00037 viṣṭabdhadeho (the correct form is viṣṭabdha, "unmoved"); GRETIL puṭenaikena "with one nostril" — M00037 nāsāpuṭena "with a nostril". The commentary of M00037 specifies: "with the right nostril" (dakṣiṇena nāsāpuṭena).
- In the commentary suspaṣṭakaṇṭhaśirovakṣāḥ "with a clear throat, head and chest" stands where the stanza has ṛju "straight". The word "erect" in square brackets is my explanation. yathaśikti in the file is a misprint for yathāśakti "according to one's power". The construction muṣkapīḍaṃ udghātavaśāt utplutau vārayan is grammatically uneven; the translation conveys the general sense.

Antaryāgapaṭala — eight postures with descriptions. Ritual posture or yogic posture; with a description. Kāllotara: Muktabodha e-text no. E00012, keyed from a manuscript: NGMPP Reel No. B 29/59, Manuscript No. pra-89; line numbers in that file: 10764–10798 > upaviśyāsane śuddhe … tatrāsanāṣṭakānāṃ tu madhyād ekaṃ tu vaṃdhayet || > svastikaṃ padmasaṃjñaṃ tu vīracaṃdrārddham eva ca | prasāritaṃ yogapaṭṭaṃ ca paryakaṃ [sic] ca yathāsukhaṃ ||

“Having sat on a clean seat… let him assume one of the eight postures: svastika, padma, vīra, candrārdha, prasārita, yogapaṭṭa, paryaṅka and ‘as is comfortable’”.

The descriptions follow (verbatim per the e-text Muktabodha E00012, file lines 10776–10800; the transcription is corrupt in places): * svastika — «dviguṇaṃ pṛṣṭhato nītvā vāmapādasya dakṣiṇaṃ | tiryaktaṃ dviguṇaṃ kṛtvā jaṃghālagnaṃ tu svastikaṃ»; * padma — «nyasedviguṇamanyonyaṃ pādamekaṃ tathottaraṃ | padmamevaṃ viddhi»; * candrārdha — «tadvat pāda dvayaṃ kṛtvā svatalānyonya saṃsthitaṃ | caṃdrārddhamevaṃ kathitaṃ»; * vīra — «dviguṇaṃ pātitaṃ vāmaṃ padaṃ dakṣaṃ tadūrddhvataḥ | kṛtvā nyonya talasthaṃ tu vīrākhyaṃ padamucyate»; * next (apparently yogapaṭṭa) — «dvaupādau dviguṇo kṛtvā tiryadūrddhaṃ yathākramaṃ | nyāsītyālī yathā paṭṭaṃ śritaśliṣṭāgulīyakau» (sense unclear); * paryaṅka — «pādadvayaṃ prasāryātha sammukhaṃ supraṇāmitaṃ | … prasāryātha karadvayaṃ | paryaṃkaṃ tatsamākhyātaṃ yathāsaṃsthaṃ yathāsukhaṃ».

Separate descriptions for prasārita and yathāsukha are not singled out in this passage.

Immediately after that: «jihvātālutale kṛtvā daṃtairdantānna śaṃspṛśet | kūrmamudrā tato vadhvā liṃgākhyā vā dhvajātmikāṃ».

This eight-posture list nearly coincides with the list of the Niśvāsa Nayasūtra ((Sanskrit known only from a quotation in a scholarly work), § 11) and with Svacchanda 7.290–291.

Verses with translation: Bṛhatkālottara, the chapter on inner worship (antaryāga): eight postures with descriptions

Source: Muktabodha E00012, file lines 10765–10804.

The Muktabodha file E00012 is keyed from the manuscript NGMPP, Reel No. B 29/59 (Manuscript No. pra-89). There is no verse numbering in the file, so each stanza is labelled with the file’s line numbers. The manuscript transcription is corrupt in places: misprints and omissions are left as they stand, unclear spots are marked in the gloss and in the notes. The manuscript folio mark “180b)” (line 10783) is omitted. Before this passage it is said that one who cannot perform outer pūjā (for instance, during ritual impurity) should perform mental worship.

Word-by-word gloss

(10765–10766) тасмāт — therefore; сарва-прайатнена — with all effort; мānасам — mental; йāгам — sacrifice, worship; āчарет — let him perform; на кевалам — not only; дхйāна — meditation (no ending in the file); тишṭхайаṃтибхиҳ — an unclear word, probably corrupt (?); парйупāсйа — honouring; те — they (? — the sense of the whole second half of the stanza is unclear).

(10768–10769) йāват — while; саṃпāта вигхнам — the onset of an obstacle (? — perhaps “while there is an obstacle”); ча — and; абхйасет — let him practise; упавиш́йа — having sat; āсане — on a seat; ш́уддхе — clean; двāтриṃш́а-агула-саммитам [so in the file, read анґула] — measuring thirty-two fingers.

(10771–10772) три-аṃш́а-уччхате [probably уччхрите] — one third (?) high (“in three parts”); чатуҳ-пāде — four-legged; мр̣ду-паṭṭа-āди — soft cloth etc.; сахйате — “is endured” (? — probably corrupt; by sense “covered with”); татра — there; āсана-ашṭакāнāм — of the eight postures; мадхйāт — from among; екам — one; ваṃдхайет [= бандхайет] — let him “bind”, i.e. assume.

(10774–10775) свастикам — svastika; падма-саṃджн̃ам — [the posture] named padma; вӣра — vīra; чаṃдра-арддхам — candrārdha (“half-moon”); ева ча — and also; прасāритам — prasārita (“extended”); йогапаṭṭам — yogapaṭṭa; парйакам [so in the file, read парйанькам] — paryaṅka; йатхā-сукхам — “as is comfortable”.

(10777–10778) двигуṇам — “doubled”, i.e. bent at the knee; пр̣шṭхатаҳ — behind, past; нӣтвā — having led; вāма-пāдасйа — of the left foot; дакшиṇам — the right [foot]; тирйактам [so in the file, read тирйак] — across; кр̣твā — having made; джаṃгхā-лагнам — adhering to the shank; ту — and; свастикам — svastika.

(10780–10781) нйасет — let him place; двигуṇам — bent; анйонйам — on each other; пāдам екам — one foot; татхā — likewise; уттарам — on top; падмам — padma; евам — thus; виддхи — know; леш́атаҳ — in brief; ш́р̣ну — hear.

(10785–10786) тадват — likewise; пāда двайам — both feet; кр̣твā — having made; сва-тала-анйонйа саṃстхитам — placed with soles toward each other; катхитам — is declared; вӣра-āсанам — vīrāsana; атаҳ — now, next.

(10794–10795) пāда-двайам — both feet; прасāрйа — having stretched; атха — then; саммукхам — forward; супраṇāмитам — well inclined (? — perhaps "with the toes extended"); пр̣шṭхатаҳ — behind, behind the back; йайадхāнастхам — an unintelligible word (?); кара-двайам — both hands.

(10797–10798) парйаṃкам — paryaṅka; тат — this; самāкхйāтам — is called; йатхā-саṃстхам — as one is used to settling; абхйастам — practised, accustomed; мāсанаṃ ваддхā — probably "āsanaṃ baddhvā" — "having assumed a posture" (?); майӯра-аṃчита-мастакаҳ — with the head bent like a peacock (? — sense unclear).

(10800–10801) джихвā — the tongue; тāлу-тале — on the palate; даṃтаиҳ — with the teeth; дантāн — the teeth; на ш́аṃспр̣ш́ет [read саṃспр̣ш́ет] — let him not touch; кӯрма-мудрā — the kūrma-mudrā ("tortoise"); татаҳ — then; вадхвā [= баддхвā] — having formed; лиṃга-ākхйā — [the mudrā] called "liṅga"; вā — or; дхваджа-ātмикāм — having the form of a banner (?).

(10803–10804) акшам — a sense (sense organ); самāнайет — let him collect, bring back; пӯрвам — first; индрийа-артха гатам — gone to the sense objects; ш́атаиҳ — "by hundreds" (? — sense unclear); тасйа — its; стхирйам [read стхаирйам] — steadiness; тадā — then; кāрйа — should be made; мāнасам — mental; праṇавам — the praṇava (the syllable oṃ); смарет — let him remember, hold in mind.

Literal translation

(10765–10766) Therefore with all effort let him perform mental worship; not only by meditation … (the second half of the stanza is corrupt).

(10768–10769) While [there is] an obstacle (?), let him practise mental worship. Having sat on a clean seat measuring thirty-two fingers, (10771–10772) one third (?) high, four-legged, [covered with] soft cloth etc., — there let him assume one of the eight postures:

(10774–10775) svastika, [the posture] named padma, vīra and candrārdha, prasārita, yogapaṭṭa, paryaṅka and "as is comfortable".

(10777–10778) Having led the bent right [foot] past the left foot, making it transverse, bent, adhering to the shank — [that is] the svastika.

(10780–10781) Let him place the bent [legs] on each other, one foot likewise on top: know that such is the padma. The candrārdha — hear in brief.

(10785–10786) Likewise making both feet placed with soles toward each other — thus is the candrārdha declared. Now hear of the vīrāsana.

(10788–10789) The left foot is bent and lowered, the right one on top of it; making [them] stand sole upon sole (?), — this is called the “vīra” position.

(10791–10792) Making both feet bent, across and up, in order, … (unintelligible word) like a band, with fingers adhering and joined (?).

(10794–10795, 10797–10798) Having stretched both feet forward, well inclined (?), behind the back … (unintelligible word), having stretched both hands, — this is called paryaṅka. “As is comfortable” — as one is used to settling. Having assumed the accustomed posture (?), with the head bent [like] a peacock (?),

(10800–10801) placing the tongue on the palate, let him not touch the teeth with the teeth; then, having formed the kūrma-mudrā or [the mudrā] called “liṅga”, in the form of a banner (?), (10803–10804) let him first collect the sense that has gone to the sense objects … (?); then its steadiness should be made; let him hold in mind the mental praṇava.

Smooth translation

Therefore one should with all one’s powers perform mental worship as long as something prevents the outer one. For this one sits on a clean seat thirty-two fingers [wide], four-legged, covered with soft cloth, and assumes one of the eight postures: svastika, padma, vīra, the half-moon (candrārdha), the extended posture (prasārita), yogapaṭṭa, paryaṅka, or the posture “as is comfortable”.

Svastika: the bent right leg is led past the left foot and laid across so that it adheres to the shank. Padma: the bent legs are placed on each other, foot upon foot. Half-moon: both legs are bent likewise, but the soles are turned toward each other. Vīra: the left leg is bent and lowered, the right placed on top, sole to sole (?). The next posture (probably yogapaṭṭa): both legs are bent and laid transversely, one above the other, “like a band”, fingers joined — the description is corrupt and only partly intelligible. Paryaṅka: both legs are stretched forward and the arms stretched out. “As is comfortable” — the way one is used to sitting.

Having assumed his accustomed posture, the yogin presses the tongue to the palate, does not clench his teeth, forms the kūrma-mudrā or the “liṅga” mudrā, withdraws the senses from their objects, makes the mind steady and mentally repeats the syllable “oṃ”.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the corrupt manuscript transcription. I have no other text of this chapter and have not collated with translations. Everything marked “(?)” is a guess.
- The order of the descriptions does not match the order of the list: the list names svastika, padma, vīra, candrārdha, prasārita, yogapaṭṭa, paryaṅka and “as is comfortable”; described are svastika, padma, candrārdha, vīra, then an unnamed posture (lines 10791–10792; by its place in the list and by the word paṭṭaṃ — probably yogapaṭṭa), then paryaṅka. There is no separate description of prasārita; possibly it is replaced by the paryaṅka description with stretched legs — that is my guess.
- vīracaṃdrārddham in the list I understand as two names — “vīra” and “candrārdha”, because both postures are described separately below, and the total then comes to eight.
- dviguṇa literally means “double, folded in two”. Of a leg I understand it as “bent at the knee”; the word is used the same way in all the descriptions of this passage.
- māsanaṃ vaddhā: probably a scribal error for āsanaṃ baddhvā “having assumed a posture” (the letter m carried over from the preceding word abhyastaṃ). That is my conjecture.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

Yogapaṭala — the term karaṇa. Yogic posture; with a description. Muktabodha E00012, file lines 15745–15762 > paryaṅkaṃ kamalaṃ bhadraṃ svastikaṃ vā calaṃ dṛḍhaṃ | vadhvā prāg eva vidhinā… | kūrmamudrāṃ tato vaddhvā nāsāgram avalokya ca | śarīraṃ daṇḍavat kāryaṃ mūrddhānaṃ pṛṣṭham eva ca | … grīvā vidhārayed yatnāc chiraḥ kāryaṃ samaṃ tadā | … kiñcin nimīlayen netre danterdantānnasaṃspṛśet | tālumadhyagate naiva jihvāgreṇa ṣaḍānana | karaṇaṃ yogamārgasthaṃ yathāvat parikalpayet | evam ādau suniḥkampaṃ karaṇenaiva kārayet

“Having duly assumed the paryaṅka, kamala, bhadra or svastika — unmoved and firm (vā calaṃ is a corrupted cācalaṃ, cf. Mataṅga Yogapāda 2.13)… keeping the body, head and back straight as a stick… let him duly establish the karaṇa — the body setting of the path of yoga; thus first achieve complete immobility by means of the karaṇa”. This confirms in a primary source the meaning of karaṇa as “the setting of the body and organs in a posture”. The whole of this passage is an almost verbatim parallel of Mataṅga Yogapāda 2.13–29 (checked against Bhatt’s edition, § 12): the posture list, grīvāṃ vidhārayed yatnāc chiraḥ kāryaṃ samaṃ, tālumadhyagate[naiva] jihvāgreṇa, karaṇaṃ yogamārga° and evamādau suniḥkampaṃ all coincide. Only the address mahāmune is here replaced by ṣaḍānana.

Literal translation

(15742–15743) The restraint of that which moves on it (?) is called prāṇāyāma; in this teaching … (?) it is declared threefold.

(15745–15749) Having first of all duly assumed the paryaṅka, kamala, bhadra or svastika, unmoved (?) and firm, — as doing so is customary for whom,

(15751–15752) then having formed the kūrma-mudrā and looking at the tip of the nose, the body should be made [straight] as a stick, and also the head and the back.

(15754–15755) … (?) not bent — the neck let him hold with effort; the head should then be kept even.

(15757–15758) Facing sky and earth (?), with the gaze resting on the tip of the nose, let him slightly close the eyes; with the teeth let him not touch the teeth.

(15760–15761) With the tip of the tongue situated in the middle of the palate, O Six-Faced One, let him duly arrange the karaṇa accepted on the path of yoga.

(15763–15764) Thus at the beginning let him make [the body] completely unmoved precisely by means of karaṇa. For one who has settled as is proper, prāṇāyāma is described.

Smooth translation

The restraint of the breath on its path is called prāṇāyāma; in this teaching it is of three kinds. First of all the yogin duly assumes his accustomed posture — paryaṅka, lotus, bhadra or svastika — and sits in it unmoved and firm. Then he forms the kūrma-mudrā, looks at the tip of the nose and keeps the body, head and back straight as a stick. The neck he holds with effort unbent, and the head even. His gaze rests on the tip of the nose, the eyes are slightly closed, the teeth do not touch, the tip of the tongue is in the middle of the palate. Thus, O Six-Faced One, according to the rules of the path of yoga one arranges the karaṇa — the setting of the body. First with its help the body is made completely unmoved; and only to one who is thus seated is prāṇāyāma taught.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the corrupt manuscript transcription; it has not been collated with other texts or translations. Everything marked “(?)” is a guess.
- svastikaṃ vā calaṃ dṛḍhaṃ: “or moved” contradicts the sense. Almost the same line occurs in Mataṅga, Yogapāda 2.13 (see Part IV, § 12.1), so I, as in the catalogue, conjecture the reading “cācalaṃ” — “and unmoved”.
- Line 15754 is the most corrupt: nistarvāṃ … nātistarvāṃ? (the question mark stands in the file itself). The conjecture about stabdhām / nātistabdhām is mine; it needs checking against the manuscript.
- karaṇa here is not a posture but the whole “setting” of the body before prāṇāyāma: the posture, the mudrā, the gaze, the position of the neck, teeth and tongue. On this term see Part IV, § 14.4.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

Literal translation

Having bound padmāsana, silent, with the rosary in hand; or, having assumed the svastika posture, keeping body and head even.

Smooth translation

[The yogin], silently repeating the mantra, holds the rosary in hand, sitting in padmāsana or having assumed the svastika posture, with body and head even.

Notes

- The same posture root — in the iconographic description of 48: “baddhapadmāsanaṃ saumyaṃ kiñcit kuñcitalocanam” — “in padmāsana, gentle, with slightly narrowed eyes”; this is the image of a deity, not a precept to the yogin.

The very beginning of the Sarvajñānottara Yogapāda (after the introductory verses on equanimity and the point of dhyāna): the place for practice, ablution, bowing, then the list of āsanas (stanza 10) and the body setting: erect torso, even head, teeth not touching teeth, tongue not touching the corners of the mouth, eyes half-closed (stanzas 11–12). After Kauṇḍinya’s list (Pāśupatasūtra-bhāṣya on 1.16) this is the second-oldest surviving list of yogic postures in Śaivism — and the closest relative of Kauṇḍinya’s: padmaka, svastika, [upastha-]añjali, pīṭha[ka], ardhacandra, sarvatobhadra. The manuscript of M00327 is heavily corrupt here (the “?” marks stand in the e-text); the reading of the Adyar edition as quoted by Kafle I give in the notes.

Literal translation

In an empty house, in a pleasant cell, in an auspicious dwelling of a deity, on a riverbank, in seclusion, at home or in a wild forest; and in an enclosed and a secluded, soundless, peopleless [place], free from obstacles to yoga, without doubts and without scorching sun.

Having bathed pure, having touched the image and bowed the head to Śiva, having saluted the teachers of yoga, let him set about yoga.

Padmaka or svastika, and also upasthā-añjali; and “half-seat” [?], ardhacandra and… bhadra [the manuscript text here is sic and contains lacunae].

Having assumed a comfortable āsana, with the body directed upward and the head even, having abandoned all attachments, with the mind [unmoved] as a cave; not touching the teeth with the teeth and not [touching] the corners of the mouth with the tongue, with slightly closed eyes — then duly let him serve Śiva.

Smooth translation

Suitable for yoga are an empty house, a pleasant cell, a temple, a riverbank, a secluded corner of one’s house or a wild forest — an enclosed or secluded, quiet and peopleless place, without obstacles to yoga, without doubts and scorching sun. Having bathed and purified himself, having touched the image and bowed to Śiva with his head, having saluted the teachers of yoga, let him set about yoga. The āsanas: padmaka, svastika, upasthā-añjali, [“half-seat”], ardhacandra, bhadra. Having assumed a comfortable posture, with the body erect and the head even, having abandoned all attachments, with an unmoved mind, not touching the teeth with the teeth and not touching the corners of the mouth with the tongue, slightly closing the eyes — thus duly let him serve Śiva.

Notes

- The Adyar edition (Adyar Library Bulletin 62, 1998) reads the list thus — per Kafle 2015, n. 765: «svastikaṃ vāpi upasthātyāñjaliṃ tathā | pīṭhārdhamardhacandraṃ vā sarvatobhadrameva vā» (each name here has a sic counterpart in the manuscript reading: “svāstikaṃ nāpi” for “svastikaṃ vāpi”, “upasthāpyāṃ jaliṃ” for “upasthātyāñjaliṃ”, “karmato? bhadrameva vā” for “sarvatobhadram eva vā”).
- Kafle cites this list as “verse 9”; in the manuscript of M00327 it is numbered “10” (a numbering divergence of the yogapāda verses between edition and manuscript — the same situation in Niśvāsamukha/Nayasūtra, § 11).
- On “upasthāñjali”: Mallinson & Singleton read it as one name (“hands folded at the groin”), Kafle counts two (“upastha” + “añjali”); cf. § 7. The manuscript “jaliṃ” does not disprove the truncated “añjaliṃ”, but neither does it prove the single reading.
- The formula of verse 12 — “na dantaiḥ saṃspṛśed dantān” — is the same as in Svacchanda 4.366 (“dantapaṅktī tathaiveha”), Skandapurāṇa 179.40cd (“dantair dantān na ca spṛśan”, per Kafle), Uttarakāmika 23.210 (“sa dantairdantānna saṃspṛśan”) and Niśvāsamukha 4.50–51; the “sṛkviṇī” (corner of the mouth) corresponds to the “kiṃcidoṣṭhau na saṃspṛśet” element of the Svacchanda. In the compendium this whole family resemblance is called body setting — in Svacchanda 4.367 it is explicitly called “karaṇaṃ tu… divyam” (“the divine karaṇa procedure”).
- “āsanaṃ ruciraṃ” — “a comfortable/pleasant āsana”; cf. Śivārcanacandrikā “svastikaṃ vā’bhyastamāsanam” (“the accustomed posture”, § 4.2) — the fixation of comfort as the norm of a posture for ritual practice.

Source: Muktabodha M00251, file lines 4110–4135, 4267–4287.

Three passages of the yoga part of the Niśvāsakārikā where both extremes in the position of the eyes are rejected: both examining the tip of the nose and closing the eyes. Postures are not named here, but this is a remark against a setting that other texts (Svacchandatantra 7.290–291 with Kṣemarāja's commentary, Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati 5.65, Kālottara 25.17) actually prescribe — a vivid example of disagreement within Śaiva yoga.

The lines of verse 16 are keyed in the e-text with glitches: after the nose-gaze line there is an extra "devyuvāca" (a duplicated manuscript mark), and the second half of the verse itself comes as a separate line; I give the order as in the file.

Word-by-word gloss

(15–16) на йогī йун̃джакаҳ каш́чит — there is no [such] yogin-joiner; на ча чакшуҳ нимīлитам — nor closing of the eyes; нāсāгра вīкшаṇам ча ева — nor examining the tip of the nose; на ту йогам праш́асйате — [that] is not praised as yoga; са-āваламбе хи анитйатвам — for in the [position] with support there is inconstancy [sic reading]; нирāламбе апи ш́ӯнйатā — and in the supportless one — emptiness; пакшадвайе апи дошаҳ асти — in both directions there is [then] a fault; ким тат дхйāйанти йогинаҳ — on what then do yogins meditate?.

(50) акшṇāм нимīланам ча ева — also closing of the eyes; нāсāграсйа ту вīкшаṇам — as well as examining the tip of the nose; на йогī йун̃джакаҳ ча ева — and not a yogin-joiner [sic construction]; артхатас ту твайā вибхо — in sense, then — by you, O Lord (?).

(52) хр̣т ча ати нāсикā агра вīкшаṇāт — of the heart (?) and from excessive gazing at the tip of the nose; на нимīланам — and not closing [the eyes].

Literal translation

There is no [such] yogin, [the sole] joiner; neither closing the eyes nor examining the tip of the nose is praised as yoga: for in the [position] with support there is inconstancy, and in the supportless one — emptiness; in both directions there is a fault — on what then do yogins meditate?

Both closing the eyes and examining the tip of the nose, and [the very designation] yogin-joiner — is, it seems, rejected (?), O Lord.

…of the heart (?) and from excessive gazing at the tip of the nose — and not closing [the eyes] [stanza corrupt].

Smooth translation

Neither closing the eyes nor gazing at the tip of the nose do I praise as yoga: when the mind has a support there is inconstancy, when it has no support — emptiness; in both extremes there is a fault, — so on what do yogins meditate?

Thus, closing the eyes and looking at the tip of the nose — all this does not make a yogin-joiner, O Lord. [The stanza is corrupt; the exact logic of the phrase cannot be restored.]

…rather than examining the tip of the nose or closing the eyes. [The half-stanza is corrupt; only the negative sense is visible.]

Notes

- The grammar of half-stanzas 15/16cd is corrupt in the manuscript transmission (“na yogī yuñjakaḥ kaścit”, “sāvalaṃbe hi anityatvaṃ”); the sense of the argument is clear, the literal division is not.
- This line repeats the same double critique as 15–16.
- For symmetry, two ordinary uncritical uses of posture in the same text: “sukhāsīnaḥ” (“sitting comfortably”, 32) and “padmāsanopaviṣṭan tu” (“and one seated in padmāsana”, 193 — visualisation of a deity).

A chapter about cheating death (prolonging life): yoga is prescribed at dawn, after reflecting on the term of one’s own death.

Devanagari (43–44)

इदं त्रिनेत्र संप्रोक्तं योगिनो भास्करोदये । तत्काले चात्मनो मृत्युं जीवितव्यं विचारयेत् । ततो योगी शुचिर्भूत्वा धीरो योगासने स्थितः ॥

Cyrillic transliteration (43–44)

идаṃ тринетра сампроктаṃ йогино бхāскародайе । таткāле чāтмано мр̣тйуṃ джӣвитавйаṃ вичāрайет । тато йогӣ ш́учирбхӯтвā дхӣро йогāсане стхитаḥ ॥

Word-by-word gloss

(43–44) идам тринетра сампроктам — this [sign?] is said in three eyes (?); йогинаḥ бхāскара-удайе — to the yogin at sunrise; таткāле ча — and at that time; āтманаḥ мр̣тйум — of his own death; джӣвитавйам — the [term of] life; вичāрайет — let him reflect; татаḥ йогӣ ш́учиḥ бхӯтвā — then the yogin, having become pure; дхӣраḥ — firm; йогāсане стхитаḥ — abiding in the yogic posture.

Literal translation

This is said in three eyes (?); at sunrise let the yogin then reflect on the [term of] life and his own death; then the yogin, having become pure and firm, abides in the yogic posture.

Smooth translation

When at dawn the yogin has reflected on the term of his life and [the approach of] his own death, then, purified, he sits firm in the yogic posture.

Notes

- Which posture exactly is meant (yogāsana — “the posture for yoga”) the text does not specify; it is a blank indication of a seated bearing for listening to nāda (see the following verses).

1.10. Kiraṇa — a quotation in the commentator (for the full Yogapāda text see § 13)

In the vyākhyā to the Somaśambhupaddhati (Muktabodha e-text no. M00220, keyed from a manuscript: IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) transcript T0170; line numbers in that file: 2081–2085) the rule of eating baddhavīrāsana is confirmed by a quotation. Ritual posture (eating), O. > śrīmatkiraṇe — * * * vīrākhyaṃ tac chṛṇuṣvetat | dakṣiṇañ cordhvatasthitvā [sic] vāmapādatalasthitaṃ ||

- 82 āsane śayane sthitvā (sitting or lying); 83 calāsane sthitasya … dehacālanāt — “on a swinging seat, or slowly rocking the body”.

Source: GRETIL file sa_vijJAnabhairava, file lines 278–290.

The Vijñānabhairava has no section on āsanas, but two dhāraṇās (78–79) contain indications of body position — the closest to “posture language” in the early Bhairava circle.

Word-by-word gloss

(78) мр̣ду āсане — on a soft seat; спхиджā екена — by one buttock (?); хаста пāдау нирāш́райам — arms and legs — without support; нидхāйа — having placed; тат прасаṅгена — because of that; парā пӯрн̣ā матих̣ бхавет — the supreme, full awareness will be.

(79) упавиш́йа āсане самйак — having properly sat on the seat; бāхӯ кр̣твā ардха кун̃читау — having made both arms slightly bent; какша вйомни манах̣ курван — directing the mind into the void of the armpits; ш́амам āйāти тат лайāт — peace comes from dissolving in that.

Literal translation

On a soft seat, [seated] on one buttock (?), placing arms and legs without support; because of that the supreme, full awareness will arise.

Having properly sat on the seat, slightly bending both arms and directing the mind into the void of the armpits — from dissolving in that, peace comes.

Smooth translation

On a soft seat, leaning on one buttock (?), with arms and legs unsupported — therefore the supreme, complete awareness will arise.

Sit on the seat and slightly bend your arms, direct the mind into the void of the armpits — from dissolving in it peace will come.

Notes

- “Sphijaikena” — “by one buttock” — is read in two ways: as the whole posture resting on one buttock (the reading of most translators) or as “on one side [of the seat]”; the text itself does not explain.
- Nearby (82) — less specific variants of the same body work: “āsane śayane sthitvā” — “sitting or lying on the seat”. There are no posture descriptions in the text: only bodily settings inside dhāraṇās.

Chapter 12 — magical applications of mantras; verse 29 prescribes japa “with an upward gaze”, 30 — standing on one leg. This is not a “yoga posture” but ritual asceticism during japa — yet a direct instruction on body position.

Word-by-word gloss

(12.29d–30) сарва пāпа винирмуктаḥ джāйате — freed from all sins he is born; кхечаре паде — in the state of the “sky-moving”; екапāда стхитаḥ бхадре — standing on one leg, O fair one; джапет ашṭоттараṃ ш́атам — let him repeat a hundred and eight [times]; йат йат прāртхайате васту — whatever thing he asks for; тат дадāти дине дине — that [the mantra] gives day after day.

Literal translation

[Verse 29: three lakṣa with an upward gaze —] freed from all sins he is born into the state of the “sky-moving”. [30] Standing on one leg, O fair one, let him repeat [the mantra] a hundred and eight times: whatever thing he asks for, that it gives day after day.

Smooth translation

“Oṃ drīṃ …” a hundred and eight times — standing on one leg, O fair one: whatever a person asks for, [the deity] will give day after day.

Notes

- “Standing on one leg” (ekapādasthita) — here a means of tapas during japa, not a named āsana; cf. Vīṇāśikha 96 below — a mere iconographic parallel “padmāsanopaviṣṭaṃ” for the deity Tumburu, not translated separately.

Literal translation

2.17. There, having gratified the deities of the six cakras with a stream of nectar. Now I shall expound another one — the posture of the yonimudrā, O dear one.

2.18. Having sat on the seat, the mantrin, facing east or else north, let him firmly clasp both knees with both arms.

2.19. With a straight body, O mistress of the gods, let him bring the nose to the knees; with the prāṇa mantra, O mistress of the gods, the air with great effort

2.20. let him inhale, O Supreme Mistress; not the least bit of air let him release. The straight body, O Supreme Mistress, — back, with effort.

2.21. By the previously stated rule let him repeat [the mantra] a hundred and eight times. There, having gratified the deities of the six cakras with a stream of nectar,

2.22. let him bring [the kuṇḍalinī] by that path into the mūlādhāra, O fair-faced one. The posture of the yonimudrā, O dear one, appeases all diseases without remainder.

2.23. What is the use of much talk, O goddess — it destroys grave ills; what is the use of much talk, O goddess — it is the cause of the mantra’s awakening.

Smooth translation

Now, dear one, I will tell of another posture — the yonimudrāsana. The mantrin sits on the seat facing east or north and firmly clasps his knees with his arms. Keeping the body straight, he bends so that his nose touches his knees and, with the prāṇa mantra, with great effort, inhales the air without releasing a drop of it. Then, with effort, he returns the body to a straight position. By the rule already described he repeats the mantra a hundred and eight times, gratifies the deities of the six cakras with a stream of nectar, and by the same path returns [the kuṇḍalinī] to the mūlādhāra. This posture cures all diseases. What more to say, goddess: it destroys grave ills and awakens the power of the mantra.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the GRETIL e-text; it has not been collated with other editions or translations.
- The combination of “with a straight body” and “bring the nose to the knees” seems contradictory. Presumably the back should not hunch during the bend, but the text does not specify this.
- ṛjukāyaṃ … viparītaṃ prayatnataḥ — there is no verb in 2.20. I understand it as “[let him return] the straight body back”, i.e. straighten up. Another understanding is possible: “[let him do] the opposite”. The word “kuṇḍalinī” in 2.22 is my addition based on the sense of 2.14–16, which speak of it (kuṇḍalinī, 2.14).
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

Chapter 25 is titled «pratyāhārapaṭalaḥ pañcaviṃśatitamaḥ» (“the twenty-fifth chapter, on pratyāhāra”) in the colophon, but in its opening it names its own content aṣṭāṅgasparśayoga — the “eight-limbed yoga of contact”. This is the only text in the catalogue where the very set of the yogic limbs is called “sparśa-yoga” by the introductory line 25.1–2. The eight limbs are: yama, niyama, āsana, prāṇāyāma, pratyāhāra, dhāraṇā, dhyāna, samādhi; yama and niyama are unfolded in 25.4–6 (I do not translate them), while the postures occupy 25.7–12 and 25.15–17. Note: inside this stretch there stand two verses on the fruit of prāṇāyāma (25.13–14) — such is the arrangement in the manuscript; I have kept the order.

Literal translation

Listen now to the eight-limbed sparśa-yoga: yama and niyama, and posture, and mastery over the breath too, withdrawal of the senses and retention, and also meditation and concentration — the knowers know such an eight-limb [set] as the sparśa-yoga. From yama to prāṇāyāma [is] the outer tetrad; from pratyāhāra to samādhi is called the inner one.

Until siddhi in the sparśa-yoga [is attained], until victory, one should observe [all this]. Twenty postures are stated in this tantra, O victorious one, O fair one.

Padmaka, svastika, gomukha, as well as vikaṭa, sūci, ekapāda, kukkuṭa, vīra; padmāsana, ekapṛṣṭha, kūrma, vimala; daṇḍa, vidaṇḍa, gokarṇa, and then siṃhāsana; vṛtta, utkuṭika, gajāsya, gajakarṇaka — twenty postures are stated; let him practise one he desires.

The steady, comfortable posture is extolled in all tantras; like the vessels for crows and other [birds] properly placed on a tripod (?); …a long-lasting concentration, relying on comfort-discomfort (?); therefore let him practise all the postures with all his strength.

By mastery over the breath, O hidden one, [one obtains] the fruit of heaven and release, and also the fruit of all the Vedas and all sacrifices, the fruit of all gifts and all holy places; by mastery over the breath, O child, the fruit of worshipping Śiva shall be.

On top of a soft mat [spread as] kuśa grass, a wrapper and then an antelope skin, comfortably seated, facing east or north; avoiding in general both over-eating and not-eating, in a windless, safe house, free from worms and insects; becoming of even neck and head, not touching the teeth with the teeth [sic], with the gaze at the tip of the nose, sitting evenly [sic], and not looking around.

Smooth translation

Now listen to the eight-limbed “yoga of contact”: yama, niyama, posture, mastery over the breath, withdrawal of the senses, retention, meditation and concentration; thus the knowers understand the eight limbs of the yoga of contact. The first tetrad — from yama to prāṇāyāma — is outer; from pratyāhāra to samādhi is called inner.

Until siddhi in the yoga of contact is won — until victory — all this should be observed. And the postures in this tantra are stated to be twenty, O victorious, fair one.

Twenty postures are named: the “lotus one”, svastika, “cow face”, the “frightful” one, “needle”, “one-legged”, “cock”, “hero”, the lotus posture, “one back” (?), “tortoise”, “stainless”, “staff”, “staffless” (?), “cow’s ear”, then “lion”, “coiled”, “crouching”, “elephant’s face” and “elephant’s ear”. Let the yogin master one of these of his choice.

The posture is declared steady and comfortable and extolled in all tantras; it should be firmly arranged like a tripod under the vessels (?); [the second verse is corrupt:] …therefore one should practise all the postures with all strength.

Mastery over the breath, O hidden one, brings the fruit of heaven and release; by it the fruit of all the Vedas, all sacrifices, all gifts, all holy waters is obtained, and the whole fruit of worshipping Śiva, O child.

On a soft mat of kuśa grass, a wrapper, and on top of them an antelope skin, the yogin seats himself comfortably, facing east or north, in a windless and safe house free of worms and insects, avoiding both over-eating and starving; he keeps his neck and head even, his teeth do not touch, his gaze rests on the tip of the nose, he does not look around.

Notes

- Posture is the third of the eight limbs and belongs to the “outer” half. The name “sparśa-yoga” (literally “yoga of touching”) occurs in no other text of the corpus; what exactly “touches” what, the chapter does not explain.
- The first half-stanza reads with difficulty (“yāvat siddhi sparśayogaṃ jayaṃ” — the construction is unclear and may be distorted in the manuscript). The vocatives “O victorious one”, “O fair one” refer to the listening goddess; lower down in 25.14 stands the vocative “vatsa” — “O child” (i.e., the listener is also read as male).
- None of these postures is described in the chapter — it is a list of names. Descriptions to a parallel list are given by the Acintyaviśvasādākhya, ch. 28 (there — almost the same list with distortions: viśada for vikaṭa, sūkṣma for sūci, khaṃ puṣṭa for ekapṛṣṭha, caṇḍa for vidaṇḍa, siddhāsana for siṃhāsana, kaṭika for utkuṭika); that block is translated above. Note also: “padmaka” and “padmāsana” are named here as two different postures.
- Verse 25.11 is unclear in its second line: the comparison with the “tripod for vessels” (kākādibhāṇḍānāṃ tripāde) stresses steadiness, but the image remains dark. In 25.12 the form “sukhāṃsukham āśritaḥ” is clearly corrupt: I give no meaningful parsing — possibly “sukhāsukham” (“both pleasant and unpleasant”) with regard to the place for practising the posture.
- These two verses — praise of prāṇāyāma — stand in the manuscript between the posture verses (25.12 and 25.15); they are given for the continuity of the context.
- The position of the body and tongue in 25.15–17 (neck-head even, teeth not touching, gaze at the nose) coincides with the precepts of 63.7–8 below (and with Mataṅga 2.26–27). The forms “dantairdantāna saṃspṛśan” and “samāsīnā” are grammatically unclear in the e-text; the most natural reading is “dantair dantān asaṃspṛśan” (“not touching the teeth with the teeth”) and “sam-āsīnaḥ”; the sense of my translation is not affected by this.

From chapter 63 (“diamond seal”, vajrakavāṭa — introduced at line 10974: «alaṃ vajrakavāṭaṃ tu pravakṣyāmi samāsataḥ») verses 5–9 are given in full: verse 5 on the seat, 6 — on the directions by time of day, 7 — the choice of svastika or padmāsana, 8 — the body bearing, 9 — the “elephant tongue” and the gaze. Everything further in this chapter is about the cakras.

Literal translation

When the Sun is in a single bed (?), on a clear day, having spread a divine cloth, auspicious, a forearm wide and a forearm long, — a comfortable seat for one person; in the morning, having become east-facing, at noon north-facing, in the evening west-facing, let him practise yoga; having assumed the posture — svastika or else padmāsana; becoming of even neck and head, with even belly and chest, with even flanks and breast, the teeth must not touch the teeth; having made the “elephant tongue”, let him look at the tip of the nose; because of two fingers below the crown (?) from below — the highest cakra [sic].

Smooth translation

On a clear auspicious day one spreads an auspicious cloth a forearm wide and long — a comfortable seat for one; in the morning the yogin sits facing east, at noon — north, in the evening — west. Having assumed svastika or padmāsana, he keeps his neck, head, belly, chest and flanks even, his teeth do not touch; having made the “elephant tongue”, he looks at the tip of the nose.

Notes

- “Gajajihvā” (“elephant’s tongue”) — evidently some position of the tongue, not explained in the text; cf. the tongue instructions at Mataṅga 2.27–28 (“the tip of the tongue at the middle of the palate”). Line 63.9cd (“because of two fingers below the crown, from below — the highest cakra”) is grammatically suspect — probably a distortion in the manuscript; it does not affect the posture and is given for the continuity of the context.

Elsewhere: 34 ūrdhvabāhusthito (Muktabodha M00248, file line 386, ritual); ch. 2 padmāsanaṃ bandhayitvā karanyāsaṃ samārabhet (Muktabodha M00248, file line 1223, Ritual posture); 13, 41, 46, 55, 70 — hosts of beings sarve padmāsanasthitāḥ (Iconography (a deity’s posture)).

The list is clearly parallel to Kālottara (GOML (Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai)) 25.8–10: vikaṭa → viśada, sūci → sūkṣma, ekapṛṣṭha → khaṃ puṣṭa, vidaṇḍa → caṇḍa, siṃhāsana → siddhāsana, utkuṭika → kaṭika. These are presumably distortions of a single source.

Descriptions (selectively, literal): * padmāsana (75–76): «urdhvopari tu … kṛtvā pādatale śubhe / padmāsanaṃ bhaved etat sarveṣāṃ pūjitaṃ param» — the soles on the thighs. * svastika (76–77): «jānūrvor antarāle tu kṛtvā pādatale śubhe / pūrvavad ṛjukāyaḥ syāt svastikaṃ» — the soles between the knees and thighs, the body straight. * gomukha (77–78): «savye dakṣiṇagulphāt tu pṛṣṭhapārśve ca yojayet / dakṣiṇe ’pi tathā savyaṃ gomukhaṃ» — the right ankle to the side of the left thigh from the back, and vice versa. * [viśada?] (78–79): «śiropari ca pādābhyāṃ karṇapārśve ca yojayet / hastābhyāṃ bhūmisaṃsthānaṃ…» — the feet behind the head, to the ears, the hands on the ground. * sūcī (79–81): «hastābhyāṃ bhūtalena syād … śarīrāṃghrīdvayaṃ cāpi vaktrāyordhvaśarī [?] bhavet / sūcīvat sthitir atyugraṃ sūcīti khalu viśrutam» — “a standing like a needle, very severe” (a handstand?). * ekapāda (82–83): «ekapādaṃ tu bhūmau tu cānyapādaṃ kaṭau nyaset / tasya pādatale nyastvā vāmapāṇiṃ ca dakṣiṇam / ūrdhvaṃ kṛtvā … atyugratapasāṃ sādhyam etad āsanam uttamam» — one leg on the ground, the other on the waist, the arms raised. * kukkuṭa (84): «padmavac cāsanaṃ kṛtvā hastābhyām ūrumadhyame / korparāvadhi cākṛṣyād aṃgaṃ tat kukkuṭaṃ bhavet». * vīra (85): «ekāṃghrim ūrau vinyasyād anyāṃghriṃ ca bhuvaḥ sthale / jānukorparasaṃyogād vīrāsanam itīritam // vyākhyānāya bhaved etat» — “for exposition (teaching)”. * bhadra (86–87): «savanīpārśvayoreva vṛṣaṇasyātha gulphagau / nikṣipya pādapārśvau ca pāṇibhyāṃ dṛḍhabandhanam / bhadrāsanaṃ…» * piṇḍāsana (88–92): «… namaskārāñjaliṃ kṛtvā garbhasthaśiśuvat kramāt / … piṇḍāsanam idaṃ proktaṃ» — the “embryo” posture. * gokarṇa (92–94): «pārśvayoḥ pādayugalaṃ nikṣipya jānunī ubhe / bhūtale sthāpya … ūrdhvakāyaḥ sthitaḥ samyak gokarṇaṃ vāyubandhanam // jānvor nikṣipya hastau … vyāttāsyaḥ krūram īkṣeta nāsāgravyagralocanaḥ» — with mouth wide open, a fierce gaze (cf. the siṃhāsana of Haṭha yoga). * (95–96, unnamed): «pādadvayaṃ ca saṃyojya tasmin pṛṣṭhe nidhāya ca / ṛjukāyas samāsīnaḥ pāṇibhyāṃ pādake nyaset». * gajāvana (?) (97–98): «… gṛhītvācāryahastaṃ ca jānvaṃghriṃ ca prasārayet / pādāṃguṣṭhāvalokaṃ ca gajāvanam itīritam». Literally: “taking the hand of the ācāryā (?), stretching out the knee and the foot, gazing at the big toe”. The reading “ācāryahasta” is doubtful. * mayūra (100–101): «avaṣṭabhya bhuvaṃ samyak talābhyāṃ tu karadvayoḥ / hastayoḥ korparadvandvaṃ anyadeśe nidhāya ca / samunnataśiraḥ pādau daṇḍavad vyomni saṃsthitaḥ / mayūrāsanam etat tu sarvapāpapraṇāśanam». * 103: «āsanaṃ viṃśatiḥ proktaṃ śreṣṭhaṃ sthitasukhāsanam».

Verses with translation: Acintyaviśvasādākhya, chapter 28 (aṣṭāṅgayogavidhi), 72–103: the twenty postures

Source: Muktabodha M00272, file lines 9223–9329.

The Muktabodha file M00272 is keyed from transcripts of the French Institute of Pondicherry and the École française d’Extrême-Orient (IFP/EFEO T0007A and T0007B). The chapter's colophon (line 9779): ityacintyaviśvasādākhye aṣṭāṃgayoga vidhiraṣṭāviṃśatiḥ paṭalaḥ — "thus in the Acintyaviśvasādākhya [ends] the twenty-eighth chapter, the rule of the eightfold yoga". Before this passage the ten yamas and the ten niyamas are listed (28.70), and it is said that yoga must not be given to one who lacks these twenty qualities (28.71). After the posture list (28.103) prāṇāyāma begins. The transcript is heavily corrupt; the page marks ("p. 533)" — "p. 539)") are omitted. In the file the number 88 occurs twice; I designate the second stanza as 28.89.

Word-by-word gloss

тасмāт — therefore; сарва прайатнена — with all effort; йогйāйа — to the worthy one; ча — and; дадет — let [him] give (the file has dadet for dadyāt); гуруҳ — the guru; падмам — padma; свастикам — svastika; гомукхам — gomukha (“cow face”); виша́дам — viśada (“bright”); see the note on the parallel list; татхā — as well as.

(28.73) сӯкшмаҳ — sūkṣma (“subtle”); хи — indeed; екапāдам — ekapāda (“one-legged”); куккуṭам — kukkuṭa (“cock”); вӣрам — vīra (“hero”); ева ча — as well as; падмāсанам — padmāsana (a repeat, see the note); кхаṃ пушṭам — an unclear name (?); кӯрмам — kūrma (“tortoise”); вималам — vimala (“stainless”).

(28.74) даṇдам — daṇḍa (“staff”); чаṇдам — caṇḍa (“fierce”); гокарṇам — gokarṇa (“cow’s ear”); сиддхāсанам — siddhāsana; атаҳ парам — then; вр̣ттим — vṛtti (?); каṭикам — kaṭika (?); гаджāсйам — gajāsya (“elephant face”); майӯракам — mayūraka (“peacock”).

(28.75) āсанам виṃша́тиҳ — twenty postures; проктам — are declared; пратйекам — of each one; ша́рṇу — listen; крамāт — in order; урдхва-упари [probably ӯрвор упари]

— onto the thighs; нандӣш́а — O Nandīśa (addressing the interlocutor); кр̣твā — having placed; пāда-тале — both soles; ш́убхе — beautiful.

(28.76) падма-āсанам — padmāsana; бхавет — shall be; етат — this; сарвешāм — by all; пӯджитам — revered; парам — highest; джāну-ӯрвоҳ антарāле — into the interval between the knees and thighs.

(28.79) хастāбхйāм — with the hands; бхӯми-саṃстхāнам — support on the ground; атаджджугхāдорбхуджāнтаре — a corrupt passage; possibly "between the shanks and the arms" (?); виṃш́адантам — viṃśadanta (? — apparently the same posture as "viśada" in the list); ити проктам — thus it is named; сӯчӣ — sūcī ("needle"); ча — and; тат-анантарам — after that.

(28.80) хастāбхйāм — with the hands; бхӯ-талена — onto the surface of the ground; сйāт — let there be [support]; дакшиṇам — the right one (? — unclear of what); ча — and; упари-стхитам — standing above; ш́арӣра-аṃгхрӣ-двайам — the body and both feet; ча апи — and also; вактрāйордхваш́арӣ — a corrupt word; possibly "upward from the face" (?); бхавет — let be.

(28.81) сӯчӣ-ват — like a needle; стхитиҳ — a standing; ати-уграм — very severe; сӯчӣ ити — "needle" — thus; кхалу — indeed; виш́рутам — it is known; ākāш́a-гамана-артхāйа — for the sake of moving through the air; ш́анаиҳ — gradually; куккуṭа-ват — like a cock (?); бхавет — let him become.

(28.82) екапāдам — one foot; бхӯмау — onto the ground; ча анйа-пāдам — and the other foot; кат̣ау — onto the waist (or: onto the thigh); нйасет — let him place; тасйа — onto its; пāда-тале — sole; нйаствā [= нйасйа] — having placed; вāма-пāṇим — the left hand; ча — and; дакшиṇам — the right one.

(28.83) ӯрдхвам — upward; кр̣твā — having made; аṃгулӣбхиҳ — with the fingers; ту — indeed; чхāданам — a covering (? — the sense is unclear); ча — and; екапāдакам — ekapādaka; ати-угра-тапасāм — for [people] of very severe asceticism; сādхйам — attainable; етат — this; āсанам — posture; уттамам — the highest.

(28.84) падма-ват — like the padma; ча — and; āсанам — the posture; кр̣твā — having made; хастāбхйāм — with the hands; ӯру-мадхйаме — into the middle of the thighs; корпара-авадхи — up to the elbows; ча — and; āкр̣шйāт [= āкр̣шет] — let him draw up; аṃгам — the body; тат — that; куккуṭам — kukkuṭa; бхавет — will be.

(28.85) ека-аṃгхрим — one foot; ӯрау — onto the thigh; винйасйāт [= винйасет] — let him place; анйа-аṃгхрим — the other foot; ча — and; бхуваḫ стхале — onto the surface of the ground; джāну-корпара-саṃйогāт — from the joining of knee and elbow; вӣра-āсанам — vīrāsana; ити ӣритам — thus it is declared.

(28.86) вйākхйāнāйа — for the exposition [of the doctrine]; бхавет — it serves; етат — this; сарва-ш́āстра-артха-бодха-кр̣т — giving comprehension of the meaning of all the śāstras; саванӣ-пāрш́вайоḫ [probably сӣванӣ-] — at the two sides of the seam (perineum); ева — indeed; вр̣шаṇасйа — of the scrotum (i.e. “under the scrotum”?); атха — then; гулпхагау [probably гулпхау] — the ankles.

(28.87) никшипйа — having placed; пāда-пāрш́вау — the sides of the feet; ча — and; пāṇибхйāм — with the hands; др̣дха-бандханам — a firm clasp; бхадра-āсанам — bhadrāsana; бхавет — will be; етат — this; сарва-вйāдхи-виша-апахам — removing all diseases and poisons.

(28.88) саṃйоджйа — having joined; аṃгхри-тала — the soles; две две — both (the file has dvedve); пунаḫ — then; антар-висарпаṇам — moving inward (? — the sense is unclear); пр̣шт̣ха-пāрш́ве — at the side of the back; кара-двандвам — both hands; аṃгхривйагропа — a corrupt word (?); саṃстхитам — placed.

(28.89) пр̣шт̣хе — on the back (?); мукхам — the face (?); накхам — the nail (?); пр̣шт̣ам — the back (?) (the whole half-stanza is corrupt); вāйу-родха-прадхāнакам — the main thing for retaining the wind; падма-ват — as in the padma; чараṇам — the legs; кр̣твā — having made; пāṇибхйāм — with the hands; ӯру-мадхйаме — into the middle of the thighs.

(28.90) никшипйа — having inserted; тāбхйāм — with them; āбадхйāт [= āбадхнӣйāт] — let him clasp; кандхаре — the neck; пӯрвават — as before; бхавет — will be; прāṇа-āродханакам — holding back the prāṇa; ча ева — and; кāйа-агнеḫ — of the fire of the body; ати-дӣпанам — a strong kindling.

(28.91) намаскāра-аⁿджалим — palms folded in greeting; кр̣твā — having made; гарбха-стха-ш́иш́у-ват — like an embryo in the womb; крамāт — gradually; апāм [probably апāна] — of the waters (probably “of the lower breath”, apāna); āкаршаṇе — for drawing in; ш́астам — it is recommended; мӯла-агнеḫ — of the root fire; дӣпанам — a kindling; бхавет — will be.

(28.92) пиṇда-āсанам — piṇḍāsana (“the posture of the ball”, “the embryo posture”); идам — this; проктам — is declared; гокарṇам — gokarṇa; тат-анантарам — after it; пāрш́вайоḫ — at the sides; пāда-йугалам — both feet; никшипйа — having placed; джāнунӣ убхе — both knees.

(28.93) бхӯ-тале — onto the ground; стхāпйа — having set; хастāбхйāм — with the hands; саṃйоге — at the joining (?); дакшиṇам — the right; парам — the other (?); ӯрдхва-кāйаḫ — with an erect torso; стхитаḫ — standing; самйак — properly; гокарṇам — gokarṇa; вāйу-бандханам — the binding of the wind.

(28.94) джа̄нвоҳ — onto the knees; никшипйа — having placed; хастау — both hands; ту — indeed; ва̄ аṃгулӣҳ — the fingers (vā here is probably redundant); ча — и; прасā́рйа — having spread; вйа̄тта-а̄сйаҳ — with gaping mouth; крӯрам — fiercely; йкшета — let him look; на̄са̄-агра-вйагра-лочанаҳ — fixing the gaze upon the tip of the nose.

(28.95) та̄па-ва̄та-а̄ди-ш́аманам — pacifying heat, wind and the rest; да̄ва-анала-ниродханам — stopping the forest fire (? — possibly an image of “inner heat”); па̄да-двайам — both feet; ча — and; саṃйоджйа — having joined; тасмин — on them (lit. “on it”); пр̣шт̣хе — on their back side; нидха̄йа — having placed [oneself]; ча — and.

(28.96) р̣джу-ка̄йаҳ — with a straight body; самā́сӣнаҳ — seated; па̄н̣ибхйа̄м — the hands; па̄даке — onto the feet (?); нйасет — let him place; апа̄на-а̄каршан̣ам — the drawing in of the apāna; курйа̄т — let him perform; ка̄йа-агнеҳ — of the fire of the body; вардханам — an increase; парам — the highest.

(28.97) ека-аṃгам — one limb; ева — indeed; хастам — the hand; ча — and; винасйа [= винйасйа] — having placed; пр̣тхивӣ-тале — onto the ground; вакшорухам — the breast (lit. “what grows on the chest”, i.e. the nipple); ча — and; хастена — with the hand; прасā́рйа — having stretched; тат-анантарам — then.

(28.98) гр̣хӣтва̄ — having grasped; а̄ча̄рйа-хастам — the hand of the ācāryā (? — the reading is doubtful); ча — and; джа̄ну-аṃгхрим — the knee and the foot; ча — and; прасā́райет — let him stretch; па̄да-аṃгушт̣ха-авалокам — gazing at the big toe; ча — and; гаджа̄ванам — gajāvana (? — apparently the same posture as “gajāsya” in the list); ити йритам — thus it is declared.

(28.99) пр̣шт̣ха-па̄рш́ве — in the back and the sides; ча — and; ш́аманам — a pacification; ва̄йӯна̄м — of the winds; бхавет — will be; тада̄ — then; а̄йушйа-вардханам — prolonging life; кхйа̄там — it is known; атиса̄ра-ниродханам — stopping diarrhoea.

(28.100) авашт̣абхйа — having braced; бхувам — onto the ground; самйак — properly; тала̄бхйа̄м — with the palms; кара-двайоҳ — of both hands; хастайоҳ — of the hands; корпара-двандвам — both elbows; анйа-деш́е — in another place (? — see the note); нидха̄йа — having placed; ча — and.

(28.101) самунната-ш́ира̄ҳ — with head raised high; па̄дау — the feet; дан̣да-ват — like a staff; вйомни — in the air; саṃстхитаҳ — holding; майӯра-а̄санам — mayūrāsana; етат — this; сарва-па̄па-пран̣а̄ш́анам — destroying all sins.

(28.102) сарва-рога̄ҳ — all diseases; ча — and; наш́йанти — disappear; виша̄н̣авишайа̄н̣и — a corrupt word; possibly “poisons” (?); апи — even; аṃга̄на̄м ча крама̄н йа̄хуҳ — a corrupt half-stanza (?); сада̄ — always; а̄ш́у-гаманам — swift movement; бхавет — will be.

(28.103) āсанам вимш́атиḥ — twenty postures; проктам — declared; ш́решṭхам — the best; стхита-сукха-āсанам — the posture in which staying is comfortable (?); прāṇāйāмам — prāṇāyāma; атха у — now; вакшйе — I shall expound; нāḍи-ш́уддхи-āди-пӯрвакам — beginning with the purification of the nāḍīs.

Literal translation

28.72–75ab. Therefore with all effort let the guru transmit [yoga] to the worthy one. Padma, svastika, gomukha, and also viśada, sūkṣma, ekapāda, kukkuṭa and vīra, padmāsana, “khaṃ puṣṭa” (?), kūrma and vimala, daṇḍa, caṇḍa, gokarṇa, then siddhāsana, vṛtti, kaṭika, gajāsya and mayūraka — twenty postures are declared. Listen to each one in order.

28.75cd–76ab. Having placed, O Nandīśa, the beautiful soles on the thighs — this shall be padmāsana, the highest, revered by all.

28.76cd–77ab. Having placed the beautiful soles into the interval between the knees and thighs, as before with a straight body — let the svastika be, entirely beautiful.

28.77cd–78ab. The right ankle let him join to the left side from the back, and likewise the left one to the right: gomukha, like a cow’s face.

28.78cd–79ab. And with both feet above the head let him join [them] to the sides of the ears (?), with the hands — support on the ground, … (corrupt) — this is named “viṃśadanta” (?).

28.79cd–81ab. And after it — sūcī. With the hands let there be [support] on the ground; and the right one (?) stands above; the body and both feet … (corrupt). A standing like a needle, very severe: known as the “needle”.

28.81cd. For the sake of moving through the air let him gradually become like a cock (?).

28.82–83. One foot onto the ground, the other foot let him place on the waist; having placed the left hand on its sole, and raised the right one upward, with the fingers — a covering (?): [this is] ekapādaka. This highest posture is attainable for [people] of very severe asceticism.

28.84. Having made the posture like the padma, [inserting] the hands into the middle of the thighs up to the elbows, let him draw up the body — this will be kukkuṭa.

28.85–86ab. Let him place one foot on the thigh and the other foot on the surface of the ground; from the joining of knee and elbow — thus is declared vīrāsana. It serves for the exposition [of the doctrine], gives comprehension of the meaning of all the śāstras.

28.86cd–87. Having placed the ankles at the two sides of the seam under the scrotum (?) and having firmly clasped the sides of the feet with the hands — this will be bhadrāsana, removing all diseases and poisons.

28.88–89ab. Having joined both soles, then — moving inward (?); both hands at the side of the back … (corrupt) placed; … (corrupt) — the main thing for retaining the wind.

28.89cd–92ab. Having made the legs as in the padma, having inserted the hands into the middle of the thighs, let him clasp the neck with them; it will be as before; [this] holds back the prāṇa and strongly kindles the fire of the body. Having folded the palms in greeting, gradually — like an embryo in the womb; recommended for drawing in the apāna (?), it will be a kindling of the root fire. This is declared piṇḍāsana.

28.92cd–93. After it — gokarṇa. Having placed both feet at the sides, having set both knees on the ground, with the hands at the joining (?) the right, the other (?), with an erect torso, properly situated — gokarṇa, the binding of the wind.

28.94–95ab. Having placed the hands on the knees and spread the fingers, with gaping mouth let him look fiercely, fixing the gaze upon the tip of the nose; [this] pacifies heat, wind and the rest, stops the forest fire (?).

28.95cd–96. Having joined both feet and placed [oneself] on their back side, seated with a straight body, let him place the hands on the feet (?); let him perform the drawing in of the apāna — the highest increase of the fire of the body.

28.97–99. Having placed one limb and the hand on the ground, then having stretched the breast with the hand (?), having grasped the hand of the ācāryā (?), let him stretch the knee and the foot, gazing at the big toe — “gajāvana” is declared (?). Then there will be a pacification of the winds in the back and the sides; it is known as prolonging life, stopping diarrhoea.

28.100–102. Having properly braced against the ground with the palms of both hands, and having placed both elbows in another place (?), with head raised high, holding the feet in the air, like a staff — this is mayūrāsana, destroying all sins. And all diseases disappear, even poisons (?); … (corrupt) there will always be swift movement (?).

28.103. Twenty postures are declared; the best is the one in which staying is comfortable (?). Now I shall expound prāṇāyāma, beginning with the purification of the nāḍīs.

Smooth translation

The guru should transmit yoga only to the worthy one. The postures are twenty: padma, svastika, gomukha, viśada, sūkṣma, ekapāda, kukkuṭa, vīra, padmāsana, “khaṃ puṣṭa” (?), kūrma, vimala, daṇḍa, caṇḍa, gokarṇa, siddhāsana, vṛtti, kaṭika, gajāsya and mayūraka. Here is each one in order.

Padmāsana, the highest, revered by all: the soles are placed on the thighs. Svastika: the soles are inserted between the knees and thighs, and the body is kept straight. Gomukha, resembling a cow’s face: the right ankle is joined to the left side from the back, and the left one likewise to the right. The next posture (apparently the “viśada” of the list): the feet are brought behind the head, to the ears, and the hands brace against the ground. The needle (sūcī): the hands brace on the ground, the body and legs are stretched upward — a severe “standing like a needle”. One who wants to travel through the air gradually becomes like a cock (the sense of this line is unclear).

Ekapāda, the posture of severe ascetics: one stands on one leg, the other is placed on the waist, the left hand on its sole, and the right is raised upward. Kukkuṭa: seated as in the padma, one inserts the hands between the thighs up to the elbows and draws up the body. Vīrāsana: one foot on the thigh, the other on the ground, the knee touching the elbow; this posture is fit for expounding the doctrine and clarifies the meaning of all the śāstras. Bhadrāsana, which clears away all diseases and poisons: the ankles are placed at the sides of the perineum under the scrotum and the feet are grasped firmly with the hands.

The next posture is described in corrupt lines: the soles are joined, the hands behind the back; it serves to retain the breath. Piṇḍāsana, the “embryo posture”: seated as in the padma, one inserts the hands between the thighs and clasps the neck with them, folding the palms in greeting, like an embryo in the womb; the posture retains the breath and kindles the inner fire. Gokarṇa, the “binding of the wind”: the feet at the sides, the knees on the ground, the torso erect. The next posture is unnamed: the hands on the knees, the fingers spread, the mouth gaping, the gaze fiercely fixed on the tip of the nose; it relieves heat and “wind”. One more unnamed posture: one sits on the joined feet with a straight body, the hands on the feet, and draws in the lower breath; it strengthens the inner fire.

Gajāvana (apparently the “gajāsya” of the list): one leg and one hand on the ground, the knee and the foot stretched out, the gaze on the big toe; the posture pacifies the “winds” in the back and sides, prolongs life and stops diarrhoea. Mayūrāsana, destroying all sins and diseases: one braces with the palms on the ground, sets the elbows under the body, raises the head, and holds the legs straight in the air, like a staff. Such are the twenty postures; the best is the one in which it is comfortable to sit. Prāṇāyāma is expounded next.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from a heavily corrupt transcript. I have no other manuscripts or editions of this chapter, and I have not collated it with other translations. Everything marked “(?)” is guesswork.
- The list at 28.72–74 almost coincides with the list of twenty postures in the Kālottara (GOML), ch. 25.8–10 (Muktabodha e-text no. M00248, keyed from a manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0059; line numbers in that file: 4688–4696): padmakaṃ svastikaṃ caiva gomukhaṃ vikaṭaṃ tathā / sūciṃ vai ekapādaṃ tu kukkuṭaṃ vīrameva ca … daṇḍaṃ vidaṇḍaṃ gokarṇaṃ siṃhāsanamataḥ param … vṛttaṃ cotkuṭikaṃ caiva gajāsyaṃ gajakarṇakam. By this parallel “viśada” and “viṃśadanta” here are presumably distortions of vikaṭa, “sūkṣma” of sūci, “khaṃ puṣṭa” of ekapṛṣṭha, “caṇḍa” of vidaṇḍa, “siddhāsana” of siṃhāsana, “kaṭika” of utkuṭika. Padmāsana occurs twice in both lists (padma/padmaka and padmāsana); the Kālottara has gajakarṇaka in the last place, here — mayūraka.

- There are fewer than twenty descriptions, and the names in them do not always match the list. The posture of 28.94–95ab (gaping mouth, fierce gaze, hands on knees) matches by features the siṃhāsana of Haṭha yoga, i.e. the “siddhāsana” (= siṃhāsana) of the list. This matching is mine; no name stands in the text.
- The gomukha (28.77cd–78ab) almost literally coincides with the Haṭha-yoga-pradīpikā 1.20 as in the manuscript of M00501 (Muktabodha e-text no. M00501, keyed from a manuscript: NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 3-325 Reel B 116/8; line numbers in that file: 45–46: savye dakṣiṇagulphaṃ tu pṛṣṭhapārśve niyojayet / dakṣiṇe tu tathā savyaṃ gomukhaṃ gomukhaṃ yathā). That is why I read dakṣiṇagulphāt in our file as dakṣiṇagulpham. The bhadrāsana (28.86cd–87) is close to the same manuscript, 1.53 (Muktabodha M00501, file line 176), and the mayūrāsana (28.100–101) — to 1.30 (Muktabodha M00501, file line 78: dharāmavaṣṭabhya karasthalābhyāṃ tatkūrparasthāpita nāmi pārśvaḥ), where the elbows are set at the sides of the navel. Hence my clarification in the smooth translation “sets the elbows under the body”; the text itself has the unclear anyadeśe “in another place”.
- The piṇḍāsana (28.89cd–92ab) is, by the description, sitting in the padma with the hands thrust between the thighs and clasping the neck. The comparison “like an embryo in the womb” is in the text itself.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

Source: Muktabodha M00090, file lines 13212–13234.

The Muktabodha file M00090 is keyed from the edition: Śivāgama siddhānta paripālana saṅgham, Devakottai, 1931. Stanzas 3.53–56 list the eight limbs of yoga and the five yamas; in 3.57 the list of niyamas ends and the list of postures begins; after the postures (3.64–66) comes prāṇāyāma. The page mark “p. 311)” at the beginning of line 13218 is omitted.

Literal translation

3.57–58ab. And devotion to the Lord — the niyama is reckoned fivefold. Gomukha, svastika, padma, ardhacandraka, vīra and yogāsana — the posture is reckoned sixfold.

3.58cd–59. Having placed the right kneecap on the left knee, both soles let him place at the sides of the back; having made thus — a very pleasant [position], endowed with the characteristics of gomukhī.

3.60. Having placed the soles at the sides of the thighs, … (corrupt) — svastika. Having placed the soles on the thighs — here it is called padmāsana.

3.61. Having made the three (?) ankles level, the soles let him place at the perineum — ardhacandra is declared. Now listen about vīrāsana.

3.62. … (?) the lowered left foot — on top of the right one: the steady vīrāsana is declared. Now listen about yogāsana.

3.63. The body and knees, bound, are wrapped with a yogapaṭṭikā, and the elbows are placed — here it is called yogāsana.

3.64. Having assumed one of these [postures], then let him engage in yoga. Before the yoga practice perform three prāṇāyāmas.

Smooth translation

The postures are six: gomukha, svastika, padma, the half-moon (ardhacandra), vīra and yogāsana. Gomukha: the right knee is placed on the left, and the feet at the sides, close to the back; this is a comfortable position. Svastika: the soles are placed at the thighs, along the shanks. Padmāsana: the soles are placed on the thighs. The half-moon: the ankles are levelled and the soles pressed to the perineum. Vīrāsana, the steady one: the left foot is placed on top of the right. Yogāsana: the body and knees are wrapped with a yogic strap, and the elbows are placed [on the knees]. Having assumed one of these postures one proceeds to yoga, and before it one performs three prāṇāyāmas.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; not collated with translations or other editions.
- gulphatrayaṃ “three ankles” makes no sense; it is probably a distortion of gulphadvayaṃ “both ankles”. This is my conjecture.
- dvibhujaṃ in 3.62 is also apparently corrupt. Aghoraśiva (Kriyākramadyotikā, Muktabodha e-text no. M00126, keyed from the edition: cidambaram, South India, 1927; line numbers in that file: 6811–6813) quotes this stanza as the definition of vīrāsana at meals: dvirbhujāpatītaṃ vāmapādaṃ dakṣiṇatopari. But even this reading does not clarify the first word.
- jaṃghāmaghnantu (3.60) I could not parse. The words “along the shanks” in the smooth translation are a guess from the word jaṅghā “shank”.
- The words “[on the knees]” in the yogāsana description are my addition; the text only says that the elbows are “placed”.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

The list of the six postures stands between the limbs of yoga: after yama–niyama (11.5) and before prāṇāyāma (11.7cd). The same passage occurs in two related āgamas — the Makuṭa (M00036, as ch. 11, vv. 6–7) and the Mukuṭa (M00424, as ch. prāṇāyāmavidhi, vv. 4–5); the readings agree.

Word-by-word gloss

(Makuṭa 11.6–7) гомукхам — gomukha (“cow face”); свастикам ча ева — and svastika; падмам ча ева — and padma (lotus); арддхачандракам — ardhacandra (“half-moon”) [separated in the file, sic]; вӣрам — vīra (“hero”); йогāсанам проктам — is declared yogāsana; шаḍвидхам ча āсанам крамāт — and the sixfold [posture] in order; прāṇāйāмам ча пӯрвоктам — and of the above-said prāṇāyāma(?); пратйāхāра крамам ш́рṇу — listen to the order of pratyāhāra.

(Mukuṭa 4–5) шадвидхам чāсанакрамам — the sixfold [posture] in order [the file has “cāsanakramam”, sic?].

Literal translation

Gomukha, svastika, padma, ardhacandra, vīra and yogāsana — are declared the six postures in order; [then] of the aforesaid prāṇāyāma and listen to the order of pratyāhāra.

The same in the reading of the Mukuṭa: gomukha, svastika, padma, ardhacandra, vīra and yogāsana — the six postures in order; [then] of prāṇāyāma, of the order of pratyāhāra listen.

Smooth translation

Six postures in order: “cow face”, svastika, lotus, “half-moon”, “hero” and yogāsana. Next pratyāhāra is spoken of.

In the Mukuṭa the list is read the same way; the minor deviations (“svastikaṃ caiva” instead of “svastikañcaiva”, “cāsanakramam” instead of “cāsanaṃ kramāt”) are manuscript ones.

Notes

- The list is the same as the Suprabheda’s (see her block), but without descriptions; cakra yoga is also mentioned here. The file’s variant — “padmañcaivārddha candrakam” — is an evident wrong word-division by the scribe for “padmaṃ caivārdhacandrakam”.

- Two mentions from other places of the Makuṭa (without translation): “uttarābhimukho maunībaddhayogāsanaḥ sthiraḥ” (2-167 — a rite) and “itthaṃ kurmāsanaṃ proktaṃ yogināṃ pūrvasādhanam” (2-111) — there kūrmāsana is not a posture but an accessory of the wandering yogin, a “tortoise” seat listed alongside the staff, strap and water-pot.
- Makuṭa 2-167 Ritual posture (Muktabodha M00036, file line 944) — uttarābhimukho maunī baddhayogāsanaḥ sthiraḥ.
- Makuṭa 2-111 (Muktabodha M00036, file line 751) — itthaṃ kūrmāsanaṃ proktaṃ yogināṃ pūrvasādhanam. T: here this is the “tortoise” seat, an item of the yogin’s equipment alongside daṇḍa, yogapaṭṭikā, kamaṇḍalu, not a posture.
- Mukuṭa Muktabodha M00424, file line 7134 — ṣaṣṭhaṃ vīrāsanaṃ kṛtvā saptamaṃ lokamudrikā: “vīrāsana” stands in a list of mudrās (?).

2.5. Jñānasiddhyāgama (E0006) — a list among the limbs of yoga

Verses with translation: Jñānasiddhyāgama 13–14: postures among the limbs of yoga (text corrupt)

Source: Muktabodha E0006, file lines 2268–2280.

In the list of (probably) ten limbs of yoga the posture is named the “tenth”; a list of posture names follows — but the e-text, keyed from a corrupt manuscript, reads only fragmentarily.

Devanagari (13–14 (the list, corrupt))

मतिर्लज्जा तथा प्रोक्ता आसनं दशमं शृणु । पत्रं गोमुख पद्मं च सिंह स्वस्ति कदाचन । वीरं सुखास निमुक्तं मयूरं दण्डासनं तथा ॥

Cyrillic transliteration (13–14 (the list, corrupt))

матирладжджā татхā проктā āсанаṃ даш́амаṃ ш́р̣ну । патраṃ гомукха падмаṃ ча симха свасти кадāчана । вӣраṃ сукхāса нимуктаṃ майӯраṃ даṇдāсанаṃ татхā ॥

Word-by-word gloss

(13–14) матиḥ ладжджā татхā проктā — intelligence and shame are also named [the previous limbs]; āсанам дашáмам шр̥ну — of the posture, the tenth [limb], listen; патрам — [sic; probably: padma — lotus]; гомукхам — gomukha; падмам ча — and padma [a second time?]; симхам — siṃha (lion); свасти(кам) — svastika [sic, truncated]; кадā́чана — [sic; untranslatable, presumably a distortion]; вӣрам — vīra; сукхāса(нам) — sukhāsana (the comfortable one) [sic]; нимуктам — [sic; unclear; possibly a distortion of “bhukta”/“bhinukta”]; майӯрам — mayūra (peacock); даṇдāсанам татхā — as well as daṇḍāsana.

Literal translation

The posture is the tenth [limb]; listen: [patram — sic]?, gomukha, padma, siṃha, svastika, … [untranslatable]; vīra, sukhāsana, … [untranslatable], mayūra, and also daṇḍāsana.

Smooth translation

“The posture is named the tenth [part of yoga]; listen: …” — what follows is a list corrupt in the manuscript: [presumably lotus], “cow face”, lotus [a second time?], “lion”, svastika …; “hero”, the comfortable one, …, “peacock” and “staff”. Between the lines the word “pañcakam” (“the pentad”) is inserted — possibly a note about the division of the list; my literal translation is impossible.

Notes

- For all its corruption the list is curious: it contains mayūra (“peacock”), which does not occur in other early lists, and the enigmatic “nimuktaṃ”. I make no attempt to restore the readings.

Word-by-word gloss

(6.38–39) мārджите ча упалипте ча — in a washed and smeared; дхāмани анйатра вā — place, or in another; будхаḥ — the knower; куш́а кḷпта āсане — on one strewn with kuśa grass; бṛсйāм атха кṛшṇамṛга аджине — seat, or on the skin of a black antelope; йатхā ишṭам āсанам бадхвā — having assumed a posture as desired; ṛджу кāйа уттара āнанаḥ — with a straight body, facing north.

Literal translation

In a washed and smeared place, or in another, the knower, on a seat strewn with kuśa grass or on the skin of a black antelope, having assumed a posture as desired, with a straight body, facing north.

Smooth translation

In a clean, washed and smeared place (or in another) the knower seats himself on a seat strewn with kuśa grass or on the skin of a black antelope, assuming whatever posture he wishes, with a straight body, facing north.

Notes

- “As he wishes” (yatheṣṭam) — a typical formula without indicating a specific posture. The iconographic posture mentions in the Kāmika’s uttarabhāga — baddhapadmāsana of deities; “utkuṭā sana yuk śānto” [sic word division in the e-text; read utkuṭāsanayuk śāntaḥ — “joined with the utkuṭa posture, pacified”] in the description of Candanāthā (Kamikāgama uttarabhāga: Muktabodha e-text no. Verses with translation: Brief ritual posture mentions in the Siddhānta āgamas and upāgamas (Yogaja, Sakalāgamasārasaṅgraha, Sūkṣma, Śivadharma; iconography: Aṃśumat, Mohacūḍottara)

In all the places listed the posture is the setting of a rite, not a subject of doctrine; the verses are given with their immediate context. The last two are definitions in iconography.

(Yogaja 25) деванйāса крамеṇа ева дехашӳуддхим самāчарет — by the placement of deities in order let him perform the purification of the body; бхӯмим саматалāм кр̣твā — having made the ground level; сукха ācӣнаҳ удак мукхаҳ — comfortably seated, facing north.

(Sakalāgamasārasaṅgraha) āджйа абхидхāрите пāтре — when ghee has been poured into the bowl; бхоктавйам тулйа джāтибхиҳ — one should eat with equals in caste; джāну мадхйа кандхарау — with the necks?(?) between the knees — [i.e. with the vessels' mouths between the knees or with the head between the knees — unclear]; маунӣ — silent; баддха вӣрāсанаҳ атхавā — or in the bound vīrāsana.

(Sūkṣma 19ab) бхӯтале трṇам āдāйа — having taken grass on the ground; ṛджукāйаҳ на вāчайан — with a straight body, not uttering [aloud].

(Śivadharma) йогапаṭṭа упавӣтāни ниведйа — having offered yogapaṭṭa cords [the straps of yogins]; ш́ивайогине — to a Śaiva yogin.

Literal translation

The placement of the deities should be done in the [indicated] order, purifying the body; having made the ground level — comfortably seated, facing north.

When ghee has been poured into the bowl, one should eat with equals in caste, [kandharau between the knees — ?], silent, — or in the bound vīrāsana.

Having taken grass on the ground, with a straight body, not uttering.

Having offered to the Śaiva yogin strap-cords (yogapaṭṭa) [as brahmin threads]: he shall obtain a city with heavenly women and pleasures.

Smooth translation

Make the ground level, sit as is comfortable, facing north — and perform the purification of the body.

Let him eat with equals in caste, in silence, [with the head hanging (?) between the knees] — or sitting in the bound vīrāsana.

Having cleaned the place, [sitting] with a straight body, in silence.

One who offers yogapaṭṭa cords to a yogin of Śiva will obtain a heavenly city full of bliss.

Notes

- The line "jānumadhyakandharau" is corrupt; one should perhaps read jānumadhyam avalambya (?) — but I do not venture to emend. The definition of the "bound vīrāsana" itself Aghoraśiva takes from the Suprabheda — see the block "At the meal of the paddhati" (§ 4.2).
- This place is one of the few where the yogapaṭṭa (strap-cord) is named precisely as an object for gifting. The ritual "çucir bhūtvā… bhadrāsane copaviśya" — Kubjikā 2382, see the block "Brief mentions in the Śākta texts" (§ 3.6). Iconographic mentions: Aṃśumat — "lambayeddakṣiṇaṃ pādaṃ vāmamutkuṭikāsanam” (“letting the right leg hang, in utkuṭikāsana with the left”, Muktabodha M00198, file line 6286, description of the deity Vṛṣā/Indra); Mohacūḍottara — “dvibhujaḥ sopavītāṅga arddhavīrāsana sthitaḥ” (“two-armed, with the cord, standing in half-vīra”, Muktabodha M00304, file line 542, Hara). Both sic-readings are preserved literally.

(12.86–87) вӣра̄санам — the “hero” posture; судурва̄кйам — foul speech; ш́а̄санам — commanding [“order!”?]; ха̄сйа роданам — laughter and crying; кеш́амочана мушн̣ӣшам — loose hair and a turban [headgear]; ка̃нчукам нагната̄м татха̄ — impudent? nakedness also [compound: “skin”/clothing?]; па̄дапрасā раṇам — stretching out the legs; ва̄дам калахам дӯшаṇам прийе — arguing, quarrelling, slandering, O

dear; аṅга бханга аṅгавāдйа āди кара аспхāлана дхӯнанам — wringing the limbs, playing the body, slapping with the hands, shaking [the limbs].

Literal translation

There is no “nose-binding” and there is no nose-binding [the line is duplicated in the file]; there is neither yama nor niyama for those who see themselves [the end of the line is corrupt]. Yoga is not from padmāsana, nor from gazing at the tip of the nose: the yoga experts call yoga the unity of the jīva and the Ātman.

In the śrīcakra one must not sit either on a seat or in vīrāsana, O dear; at the gazing upon the śrīcakra, O goddess — the destruction of sin for both eyes.

The “hero” posture, foul speech, commanding, laughter and crying; loose hair and a turban, nakedness also; stretching out the legs [forward], arguing, quarrelling, slandering, O dear; wringing the limbs, playing the body, slapping with the hands, shaking.

Smooth translation

There is neither “nose-binding”, nor yama, nor niyama [the first line is incomplete in the e-text]. Yoga is not born from padmāsana, nor from contemplating the tip of the nose: the knowledgeable call yoga the unity of the individual soul and the Ātman.

In the śrīcakra one must not sit either on a seat or in the “hero” posture, O dear; [whereas] gazing upon the śrīcakra destroys sin in both eyes, O goddess.

[In the presence of the guru a Kaula must not]: sit in the “hero” posture, speak roughly and imperiously, laugh and cry, wear loose hair or a turban, bare himself, stretch out the legs [forward], argue, quarrel, slander, wring his limbs, strike himself, wave and shake [arms and legs].

Notes

- A programmatic anti-technical formula of Kaula yoga; cf. the same polemic in the Niśvāsakārikā (its block above) and the opposite precept in Svacchandatantra 7.290–291 and Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati 5.65.
- This is ritual etiquette, not an assessment of postures: vīrāsana and “stretched legs” are signs of disrespectful sitting before an elder (the same prohibitions in Śrīvidyārṇava 2-56 and the Kulamuktikallolinī).
- 11.13 — a prohibition. Muktabodha M00031, file line 2721 — śrīcakre nāsane tiṣṭhen na ca vīrāsane priye — in the śrīcakra do not sit on a seat and do not sit in vīrāsana.
- 12.85–87 — what not to do in the presence of the guru. Muktabodha M00031, file lines 3106–3110 — among other things vīrāsanaṃ, pādaprasāraṇaṃ (stretching of the legs). The same in Śrīvidyārṇava 2-56 (Muktabodha e-text no. M00217, keyed from the edition: editor Ram Chandra Kak; Varanasi Tantrika Text Series, Varanasi, 1947; line number in that file: 1766) and the Kulamuktikallolinī (Muktabodha e-text no. 3.2. Tantrarāja, ch. 27 (śvāsarūpa), 59–63 and the Manoramā commentary (M00122)

Yogic posture; with a description. Tantrarājatantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00122, keyed from the edition: editor lakṣmaṇa śāstrī; Tantrik Text Series, 1929; line numbers in that file: 20884–20925 > padmasvastikavīrākhyabhadrāṇy uktāni vai kramāt / āsanāni manaḥsthairyyakaraṇe sādhakāni vai // 59 > ūrvor upari vinyasya vyatyāsāt pādayos tale / bāhyapārśvadvayasparśāt tat padmāsanam īritam // 60 > tathā tayor adhobhāgatadantaḥpārśvasaṅgamāt / svastikākārataḥ proktaṃ tad bhadrāsanam īśvari // 61 [sic: the commentary interprets 61 as svastikāsana] > talāntaḥ pārśvagaṃ kuryyādekamanyantu vāhyagam / ūrvor adhas tathorddhe ca dvidhā bhadrāsanaṃ smṛtam // 62 > vyatyastatalayor ūrddhasaṃsparśād uccajaṅghayoḥ / pādayor jānudeśe vai vīrākhyaṃ yogapaṭṭataḥ // 63

The commentary (Muktabodha M00122, file lines 20914–20949) speaks of eight forms: nāmapuraḥsaram aṣṭavidhāny āsanasvarūpāṇy upadiśati. Each posture is “twofold” (by the exchange of left and right sides): dvividhaṃ padmāsanaṃ … dvividhaṃ svastikāsanaṃ … dvividhaṃ bhadrāsanaṃ … dvividhaṃ vīrāsanam. For the vīrāsana it explains: “…pādayorjānudeśe svāntarādhimadhye ca yogapaṭṭavandhanājjānvorupari prasāritavāhudaṇḍaprakoṣṭhavinyāsāt” — “having bound with a yogapaṭṭa, placing the forearms of the outstretched arms on the knees”.

Verses with translation: Tantrarāja, ch. 27, 59–63, and the “Manoramā” commentary on them

Source: Muktabodha M00122, file lines 20883–20949.

The Muktabodha file M00122 is keyed from the edition: Tantrarājatantra with commentary Manoramā, ed. Lakṣmaṇa Śāstrī, John Woodroffe, Tantrik Texts, 1929. Stanzas 27.56–58 list the yamas and eleven niyamas; after the postures (27.64 onwards) comes prāṇāyāma. In the file the root stanzas and the commentary interleave: the commentary on 59–62 stands after stanza 61, the end of the commentary on 62 and the commentary on 63 — after stanza 67. Below only the parts of the commentary relating to the postures are given. The page marks (“p. 527)”) are omitted.

Literal translation

27.59. The postures called padma, svastika, vīra and bhadra are named in order; they assist in bringing the mind to steadiness.

27.60. Having placed the soles of both feet crosswise onto the thighs — from the touch of the two outer edges — this is declared padmāsana.

27.61. Likewise — from the joining of their lower part with the inner edge of those, by the svastika form — this is named bhadrāsana (?), O Mistress.

27.62. One [foot] let him make touching with the inner edge of the sole, and the other with the outer one (?); beneath the thighs and above — twofold is bhadrāsana reckoned.

27.63. With the feet whose soles are crossed, with raised shanks, from touching above, in the region of the knees — with a yogapaṭṭa — [the posture] named vīra.

Commentary on 59–62. By the four ślokas from “padma” to “smṛtam” [the author], beginning with the names, expounds the posture forms of eight varieties. “In bringing the mind to steadiness” — understood: in the practice of yoga. “Assisting” — helping. By the śloka “onto the thighs…” this is what is said: The edge of the left sole on the little-toe side is placed onto the middle of the right thigh, and the edge of the right sole on the little-toe side, having been passed over the left shank, — onto the middle of the left thigh, crosswise; or, having passed the left shank over the right one, one places as before. Thus padmāsana is twofold. “Likewise” — in the twofold order of crossing; “of them” — of the thighs; “from the joining with the inner edge of those”. This is what is said: The lower part of the right thigh is placed upon the edge of the left sole on the big-toe side, and the lower part of the left thigh — upon the edge of the right sole on the big-toe side, crosswise as before; and again as before one places the shanks one over the other, and the edges of both soles on the big-toe sides against one another. Thus svastikāsana is twofold. By the śloka “talānta…” this is what is said: one foot let him apply to the lower part of one of the thighs with the edge of its sole on the big-toe side; and again let him do the same, swapping left and right. Therefore bhadrāsana is twofold.

End of the commentary on 62 and the commentary on 63. All together — eight postures. Here by the word “twofold” the twofoldness of all postures [is expressed] — such is the tradition. By the śloka “vyatyasta…” this is what is said: The feet are raised by the contact with the tops of the shanks (?), they rest on the ground by the edge of the crossed soles on the little-toe side (?); in the region of the knees and … (unclear) the yogapaṭṭa is tied, and the forearms of the outstretched arms are placed upon the knees. And again as before — by the difference of position, when the shanks touch outside or inside — vīrāsana is twofold.

Smooth translation

The four postures — padma, svastika, vīra and bhadra — help make the mind steady. Padmāsana: the feet are placed crosswise on the thighs so that the outer edges of the soles touch the thighs. The next posture has the form of a svastika: the thighs from below join with the inner edges of the feet. The text names it bhadrāsana, but the commentator interprets it as svastikāsana. Bhadrāsana: one foot touches [the thigh] with the inner edge of the sole, the other with the outer one; it is done twofold — beneath the thighs and above them. Vīrāsana: the soles are crossed, the shanks raised, around the knees — a yogic strap.

The commentator explains that each posture can be performed in two ways, swapping the left and right leg — making eight postures in all. In padmāsana the edge of the sole on the little-toe side lies on the middle of the opposite thigh, and the shanks are crossed. In svastikāsana the thighs rest below upon the edges of the soles on the big-toe sides, the shanks crossed, the edges of the soles on the big-toe sides touching. In bhadrāsana the foot with the big-toe-side edge is applied to the underside of the thigh. In vīrāsana the knees are wrapped with the yogic strap, and the forearms of the outstretched arms lie on the knees.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.
- In 27.61 the text calls the posture bhadrāsanam, even though the list in 27.59 (padma, svastika, vīra, bhadra) and the commentary (dvividhaṃ svastikāsanaṃ bhavatīti) speak of svastika. Bhadrāsana is then described again at 27.62. Presumably in 27.61 the word bhadrāsanam stands erroneously for svastikāsana; this is my conjecture.
- The list in 27.59 names vīrāsana before bhadra, while the descriptions come in a different order: padma, svastika, bhadra, vīra. So in the file.
- The commentary on 27.63 is difficult; I did not understand the word svāntarādhimadhye. Places marked "(?)" in the translation are guesses.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

Verses with translation: Śāradātilaka 23.131 (the postures for the six rites) and Rāghavabhaṭṭa's commentary

Source: Muktabodha M00077, file lines 30657–30670.

The Muktabodha file M00077 is the "Śāradātilaka" of Lakṣmaṇadeśikendra with Rāghavabhaṭṭa's commentary "Padārthādarśa". The file header names A. Avalon (John Woodroffe) as editor; the text has been transliterated into Latin from the Devanagari input of Dr S. Malaviya. Chapter 23 from 23.121 expounds the six rites (ṣaṭkarman): pacification, subjugation, immobilisation, hostility, banishing and killing (23.122). In the commentary on 23.126–127 Rāghavabhaṭṭa lists among the things one must know for each rite also the posture (āsana, line 30604). Verses 23.128–130 deal with the "seasons" within the day for each rite; 23.132 — with the six mudrās for these rites "in order".

Literal translation

23.131. Padma, svastika, further vikaṭa, again kukkuṭa, vajra and bhadraka — [such are] the postures, as the wise say.

The commentary. The definition of the first two and of the last two [the author] will expound in the last [chapter]. The definitions of vikaṭāsana and kukkuṭāsana are thus: “Let him thrust both arms into the interval between the knees and the shanks, having sat in utkaṭāsana, — this shall be vikaṭāsana. First having made utkaṭāsana, then [having placed] both feet even, both arms inside the knees: kukkuṭāsana is declared”. In another [text] special seats are named: “For immobilising — elephant hide, for killing — buffalo hide, for banishing — sheep hide, for the subjugation rite — from rhinoceros, for hostility [the hide] of the jackal is named, for the pacification rite — cowhide; the seat of tiger skin is declared as bringing about all siddhis”.

Smooth translation

The wise name six postures for these rites: padma, svastika, vikaṭa, kukkuṭa, vajra and bhadra.

The commentator Rāghavabhaṭṭa writes that padma, svastika, vajra and bhadra will be described by the author in the last chapter. The other two postures he explains with a quotation. Vikaṭa: sitting in a squat, one thrusts both arms between the knees and the shanks. Kukkuṭa: having sat in a squat, one places the feet even and keeps the arms inside the knees. Then he quotes from another source on which hide to sit for each rite: elephant — for immobilising, buffalo — for killing, sheep — for banishing, rhinoceros — for subjugating, jackal — for hostility, cow — for pacifying. The tiger's hide gives all siddhis.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.
- The stanza itself does not say which posture belongs to which rite. The neighbouring stanzas (seasons — 23.129–130, mudrās — 23.132) enumerate their items in the order of the rites. So one may suppose that the postures are named in the same order, but this is only my conjecture.
- Rāghavabhaṭṭa does not name the sources of his quotations here: the posture definitions are introduced by the word yathā ("thus"), the list of hides — by the words anyatra … uktāḥ ("named in another [text]").
- The "last chapter" is chapter 25 of the same text: padma, svastika, vajra and bhadra are described at 25.9–16 (see the next block).
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

  Translation:

  - padma: the soles on the thighs, the big toes grasped crosswise with the hands (behind the back, per the commentary: pṛṣṭhabhāge hastamātravyutkramaḥ).

- svastika: the soles between the knees and thighs, the body straight.
- bhadra: the ankles at the sides of the perineal seam, the hands clasping the heels and feet under the scrotum.
- vajra: the feet on the thighs (per the commentary — at the roots of the thighs), the hands placed on the knees, palms' fingers towards oneself.
- vīra: one foot below, the other on the thigh.

Rāghavabhaṭṭa remarks: standing brings fatigue, lying brings sleep, therefore the practice of knowledge is possible only sitting (upaviṣṭasyaiva jñānābhyāsādhikāraḥ … tasmāt padmāsanādyuktiḥ).

Verses with translation: Śāradātilaka 25.9–16: the five postures, and Rāghavabhaṭṭa's commentary

Source: Muktabodha M00077, file lines 32272–32370.

On the file M00077 see the previous block. Chapter 25 expounds the eightfold yoga. In 25.7–9 the yamas and the ten niyamas are listed; after the postures (from 25.16cd) comes prāṇāyāma. The stanza numbering in the file is shifted against the half-stanzas: number 9 stands after the line padmāsanaṃ … bhadrāsanaṃ tathā, number 16 — after the first line on prāṇāyāma. Therefore stanza 25.9 begins with the last line of the niyama list (file line 32272), and 25.16 ends with the first line on prāṇāyāma (line 32370). Rāghavabhaṭṭa's commentary stands in the file after stanzas 11, 12 and 15–16; below it is given in full, except the quotations about prāṇāyāma.

адхаḥ — downward; кр̣твā — having placed; винйасйа — having placed; ӯрау — on the thigh; татхā — likewise; итарам — the other one.

(25.16) р̣джу-кāйаḥ — with a straight body; вишéт йогӣ — let the yogin sit; вӣра-āсанам — vīrāsana; ити ӣритам — thus it is declared; идāйā — through iд̣ā; ākаршайет — let him draw in; вāйум бāхйам — the external air; шод̣ашáма-мāтрайā — in sixteen measures (mātrās).

(commentary on 13–16) сӣванйāḥ ити — [the gloss of] “of the seam”; гуда-мед̣хра-антарāла-ӯрдхва-рекхā — the line going upward in the interval between the anus and the virile member; сӣванӣ — is the sīvanī (seam); тасйāḥ пāршáвайоḥ — at its sides; вāма-пāршáве — on the left side; дакшиṇа-пāда-гулпхам — the ankle of the right foot; анйасмин анйам — on the other one — the other one; вр̣шаṇа-адхаḥ — “under the scrotum”; аṇдакоша-адхаḥ — under the scrotum (a synonym); пāда-пāршṇӣ — the heels of the feet; вйатӣāсена — crosswise; бхаватаḥ ити шéшаḥ — “are [situated]” is understood; тат-грантхӣ — the knots on them (on the legs); гхуṭике гулпхау — “ghuṭika” and “gulpha” (the ankles); пумāн — masculine; пāшṇиḥ [= пāршṇиḥ] — the heel; тайоḥ адхаḥ — below them; ити кошáаḥ — thus [in] the lexicon; пāṇибхйāм парибандхайет — “let him clasp with the hands”; пӯрвават анг̇ушṭхау ити шéшаḥ — understood: as before, the big toes; анг̇ушṭха-бандханена — by the grasping of the big toes; р̣джу-кāйатвам — straightness of the body; сиддхам — is achieved; тат уктам йогасāре — of this it is said in the “Yogasāra”; сӣванйāḥ āтманаḥ пāршáве — at the sides of one’s own seam; гулпхау никшипйа пāдайоḥ — having placed the ankles of the feet; савйе дакшиṇа-гулпхам ча — the right ankle — on the left; дакшиṇе дакшиṇа-итарам — on the right — the other one; дакше савйа-карам нйасйа — having placed the left hand to the right; савйе нйасйа итарам карам — having placed the other hand to the left; анг̇ушṭхау ча нибадхнӣйāт — and let him grasp the big toes; хастāбхйāм вйуткрамеṇа ту — with the hands crosswise; ӯрве ити — [the gloss of] “onto the thighs”; свасйа ӯру-мӯле — to the roots of one’s own thighs; крамāт — in order; пāда-двайам курйāт — let him place both feet; пратйаṅмукха-анг̇улӣ — “pratyaṅmukhāṅgulī”; сва-саммукха-анг̇улӣ — with the palms’ fingers turned towards oneself; карау джāнвоḥ упари нидадхйāт ити анвайаḥ — the word order is: “let him place the hands on the knees”; атра — here; р̣джукāйатвам — straightness of the body; джāну-хаста-дāнāт ева — by the very placing of the hands on the knees; сиддхам — is achieved; екам ити — [the gloss of] “one…”; адхаḥ ити — “downward” means; апара-спхичаḥ — [under] the other buttock.

Literal translation

25.9–10ab. These ten niyamas are named by the experts in the discipline of yoga. Padmāsana, called svastika, vajra, bhadrāsana, and also vīrāsana — thus is named, in order, the pentad of postures.

25.10cd–11. Having properly placed both soles on the thighs, then let him grasp with the hands, crosswise, both big toes — thus is named padmāsana, dear to the hearts of yogins.

Commentary on 9–11. “The pentad of postures”: for one standing there is fatigue, and of one who has fallen, like a staff, onto a bed and the like, sleep takes hold; therefore the right to the practice of knowledge belongs only to one seated. Moreover, if one sits any old way — illness and unfavourableness for Kuṇḍalinī. Therefore padmāsana and the rest are spoken of. Of this it is said in the “Vasiṣṭhasaṃhitā”: “By the posture the yogin destroys illnesses, by prāṇāyāma — sin, by pratyāhāra — always the mental disturbance; by dhāraṇās [he attains] firmness of mind, by knowledge — the highest lordship; in samādhi, having abandoned good and evil deeds, he attains liberation”. “Onto the thighs” — each onto the opposite thigh. The word “crosswise” refers here too. In the words “let him grasp”, “crosswise” means the crossing of only the hands behind the back; and in the grasping of the big toes, each toe is grasped by the corresponding hand.

25.12. Having properly placed both soles between the knees and the thighs, let the yogin sit with a straight body — this they call svastika.

Commentary on 12. “Between” — the left foot on the right, the right one on the left. In the previous posture the straightness of the body is achieved by the grasping of the big toes itself; here, since that is absent, “with a straight body” is said.

25.13–14ab. Let him place both ankles utterly motionlessly at the sides of the seam; under the scrotum let him clasp the heels and feet with the hands — bhadrāsana is declared, the highest, revered by the yogins.

25.14cd–15ab. Let him place both feet in order onto the thighs, and let him place onto the knees the hands with the palms’ fingers turned towards oneself — the unsurpassed vajrāsana is named.

25.15cd–16ab. Having placed one foot downward, and having placed the other one likewise on the thigh, let the yogin sit with a straight body — thus is declared vīrāsana.

25.16cd. Let him draw in the external air through iḍā in sixteen measures (mātrās).

Commentary on 13–16. “The seam” — the line going upward in the interval between the anus and the virile member is the sīvanī. At its sides: on the left side — the ankle of the right foot, on the other one — the other one. “Under the scrotum” — the heels of the feet are crosswise, it is understood. [It is said in] the lexicon: “The knots on them are ghuṭika and gulpha (the ankles); below them — the heel, masculine”. “Let him clasp with the hands” — understood: as before, the big toes. By the grasping of the big toes the straightness of the body is achieved. Of this it is said in the “Yogasāra”: “Having placed the ankles of the feet at the sides of one’s own seam — the right ankle on the left, the other one on the right — having placed the left hand to the right, the other hand to the left, let him grasp the big toes with the hands crosswise”. “Onto the thighs” — let him place both feet in order to the roots of his own thighs. “Pratyaṅmukhāṅgulī” — with the palms’ fingers turned towards oneself; the word order is: “let him place the hands with the palms’ fingers turned towards oneself on the knees”. Here the straightness of the body is achieved by the very placing of the hands on the knees. “One… downward” — under the other buttock.

Smooth translation

The postures are five: padmāsana, svastika, vajra, bhadrāsana and vīrāsana. Padmāsana, dear to the hearts of yogins: the soles are placed on the thighs, and the big toes are grasped with the hands crossed behind the back. Svastika: the soles are inserted between the knees and the thighs, and one sits straight. Bhadrāsana, the highest, revered by the yogins: the ankles are placed motionlessly at the sides of the perineum, under the scrotum, and the hands clasp the heels and feet. Vajrāsana, unsurpassed: the feet are placed to the thighs, and the hands — on the knees, fingers towards oneself. Vīrāsana: one foot is tucked underneath, the other placed on the thigh, and one sits straight. Then prāṇāyāma begins: the external air is drawn in through iḍā (the left nostril) in sixteen measures.

Rāghavabhaṭṭa explains why postures are needed. Standing tires one, lying sends one to sleep — therefore the practice of knowledge is possible only sitting. And if one sits any old way, illnesses come and Kuṇḍalinī is not favourable. He quotes the “Vasiṣṭhasaṃhitā”: the posture destroys illnesses, prāṇāyāma — sin, pratyāhāra — mental disturbances. He specifies the padmāsana thus: each foot lies on the opposite thigh, the hands are crossed behind the back. In svastika the left foot lies on the right, the right one on the left; the straight body is specially stipulated here, because there is no toe-grasp to straighten the back. The seam (sīvanī) is the line between the anus and the virile member. In bhadrāsana the right ankle lies to the left of the seam, the left one to the right, the heels are crossed under the scrotum, and the hands grasp the big toes. In support he quotes the “Yogasāra”. In vajrāsana the feet lie at the roots of the thighs, and the hands — on the knees, and this alone straightens the body. In vīrāsana “downward” means “under the other buttock”.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.
- The file has ūrve and ūrveḥ for ūrvoḥ (25.10, 25.12, 25.14 and in the commentary), samuddaṣṭaṃ for samuddiṣṭaṃ, nayasyet for nyasyet, pāṣṇī for pārṣṇi. These are apparently misprints of the input; corrected forms are given in brackets in the parsing.
- svastikākhyaṃ in 25.9 means “called svastika”: this is the second posture of the list, not a definition of padmāsana. So it follows from 25.12.
- The quotation from the “Yogasāra” in Rāghavabhaṭṭa agrees almost literally with the svastika description of Kaulāvalīnirṇaya 19 (sīvanyām ātmanaḥ pārśve gulphau niḥkṣipya…, M00231; see the block on Kaulāvalīnirṇaya 19.31–39

(19.37) вр̣шаṇасйа адхаḥ — under the scrotum; сӣванйāḥ пāрш́вайоḥ — at the two sides of the seam; кшипет — let him place; пāрш́ва-пāдау — the sides of the feet (? — or “the feet [placed] at the sides”); пāṇибхйāм — with the hands; др̣дхам — firmly; баддхвā — having clasped; суниш́чалаḥ — utterly motionless.

(19.38) бхадра-āсанам — bhadrāsana; сарва-вйāдхи-виша-апахам — removing all diseases and poisons; ӯрвоḥ — onto the thighs; пāдау — both feet; крамāт — in turn; нйасйа — having placed; джāнвоḥ — onto the knees; пратйак-мукха-анӷулау [the file has пратйаммукха-] — with the fingers turned backwards (?).

(19.39) карау — both hands; видадхйāт — let him place; āкхйāтам — is declared; ваджра-āсанам — vajrāsana; ануттамам — unsurpassed; сва-сва-калпа-видхāнена — according to the rule of his own manual (kalpa); пӯджā-āдӣн — the pūjā and the rest; самāчарет — let him perform.

Literal translation

19.31. “The one called padma, svastika, further vikaṭa, again kukkuṭa, vajra, bhadraka” — thus the wise call the postures.

19.32–33. And let him, O lord of heroes, grasp with the hands, crosswise, the big toes [of the feet], having placed both soles on the thighs: this will be padmāsana, revered by all. At the performance of pūjā and japa let him perform the retaining of the big toe (?).

19.34. Having properly placed both soles between the knees and the thighs, with a straight body, comfortably seated, — this they call svastika.

19.35. Or: having placed the ankles of both feet at the sides of one’s own seam, — this too is named svastika; having placed the other hand onto the left one.

19.36. Having assumed padmāsana, having inserted the hands between the knees and the thighs, having set [them] on the ground, “resting in the air” (?), — kukkuṭāsana.

19.37–38ab. The ankles let him place under the scrotum at the two sides of the seam and, having firmly clasped the sides of the feet with the hands, utterly motionless, — this will be bhadrāsana, removing all diseases and poisons.

19.38cd–39. Having placed the feet in turn on the thighs, let him place onto the knees the hands with the fingers turned backwards (?), — the unsurpassed vajrāsana is declared. And let him perform the pūjā and the rest according to the rule of his own manual.

Smooth translation

The wise name these postures: padma, svastika, vikaṭa, kukkuṭa, vajra and bhadraka.

Padmāsana, revered by all: the soles are placed on the thighs, and with the hands, crossed behind the back, one grasps the big toes. Svastika: the soles are inserted between the knees and the thighs, and one sits comfortably with a straight body; or else the ankles are placed at the sides of the perineum, and the right hand — onto the left one. Kukkuṭāsana: having assumed padmāsana, one thrusts the hands between the thighs and the shanks, braces them on the ground and rises into the air. Bhadrāsana, which clears away all diseases and poisons: the ankles are placed under the scrotum at the sides of the perineum, and the feet are firmly held with the hands, sitting utterly motionless. Vajrāsana: the feet are placed in turn on the thighs, and the hands — on the knees. The pūjā and the rest are performed according to the rules of one's own manual.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.
- The list in 19.31 names six postures, but only five are described: vikaṭa is not described here.
- The words "crossed behind the back" in the smooth translation of 19.32 are my clarification to vyutkrameṇa "in reverse order". This posture (baddhapadmāsana) is usually so understood, but the text itself says only "crosswise".
- 19.33cd (aṅguṣṭhaṃ dhāraṇañcaret) I understand tentatively. Possibly it is an instruction to retain the big toes also during pūjā and japa; possibly some other rule.
- The same definitions occur nearly verbatim in other texts of the corpus. Padmāsana — in Gandharvatantra 6.51 (Muktabodha M00646, file line 2033: aṅguṣṭhau ca nibadhnīyād hastābhyāṃ vyutkramāt tataḥ). Kukkuṭāsana — in the manuscript of M00501 with the "Haṭha-yoga-pradīpikā", 1.23 (Muktabodha e-text no. M00501, keyed from a manuscript: NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 3-325 Reel B 116/8; line number in that file: 55: vinyasya bhūmau saṃsthāpya vyomasthaḥ kukkuṭāsanaṃ). Bhadrāsana — ibid., 1.53 (Muktabodha M00501, file line 176: gulphau ca vṛṣaṇasyādhaḥ sīvanyāḥ pārśvayoḥ kṣipet). Vajrāsana — in Gandharvatantra 6.54 (Muktabodha M00646, file line 2040: pādau kramānnyasya jānvoḥ pratyaṅmukhāṅgulī). By these parallels romasthaḥ in 19.36 is a distortion of vyomasthaḥ "resting in the air", and pratyammukhāṅgulau in 19.38 is a distortion of pratyaṅmukhāṅgulau.
- pratyaṅmukha literally means "turned westward" or "turned backwards". How exactly the fingers of the hands should lie cannot be established precisely from the text.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

- 6.45–56 (Muktabodha M00646, file lines 2022–2044). Yogic posture; with a description — five postures are described (the same block as in Śāradātilaka 25, § 3.3). Āsana is the third of the eight limbs of yoga (6.45–46). > padmāsanaṃ svastikākhyaṃ bhadraṃ vajrāsanaṃ tathā || 49 || vīrāsanam iti proktaṃ kramād āsanapañcakam | ūrvor upari vinyasya samyak pādatale ubhe || 50 || aṅguṣṭhau ca nibadhnīyād hastābhyāṃ vyutkramāt tataḥ | padmāsanam iti proktaṃ… || 51 || jānūrvor antare samyak kṛtvā pādatale ubhe | ṛjukāyo vased yogī svastikaṃ tat pracakṣate || 52 || sīvanyāḥ pārśvayor nyased gulphayugmaṃ suniścalam | vṛṣaṇādhaḥ pādapārṣṇiṃ pāṇibhyāṃ paribandhayet || 53 || bhadrāsanaṃ… || ūrvoḥ pādau kramān nyasya jānvoḥ pratyaṅmukhāṅgulī || 54 || karau nidadhyād ākhyātaṃ vajrāsanam anuttamam | ekaṃ pādam adhaḥ kṛtvā vinyasyorāv athetaram || 55 || ṛjukāyo vased yogī vīrāsanam itīritam |
    - The editors' note on 6.57 (in square brackets; this is not the text of the tantra). The measure mātrā is to circle the knee with the hand. Quotations: Nārada (… hasta sva jānumaṇḍalam | paryeti mātrā…) and Phetkāriṇītantra (jānu pradakṣiṇīkṛtya na vṛta [sic, ? druta] na vilambitam | kriyate cāgulīsphoṭa sā mātrā [sic]). Cf. Mālinīvijayottaratantra 17.12 (§ 14.2).
    - 6.61 — the signs of prāṇāyāma: dehe svedodgamo 'dhamaḥ | madhyamaḥ kampasaṃyukto bhūmityāgaḥ paro mataḥ — "the lowest — sweat, the middle — with trembling, the highest — tearing away from the ground".

Verses with translation: Gandharvatantra 6.45–56: the eight limbs of yoga, the yamas, the niyamas and the five postures

Source: Muktabodha M00646, file lines 2020–2045.

The Muktabodha file M00646 is keyed from the edition: Gandharvatantra, ed. Ram Chandra Kak and Harabhatta Shastri, Srinagar, 1934 (after a manuscript from the collection of Maharaja Harisingh). In square brackets inside the lines stand the editors' remarks on variant readings. "ka pāṭha", "kha pāṭha" mean "reading of [manuscript] ka", "reading of [manuscript] kha"; which manuscripts are so designated is not said in the file. The page marks ("pṛ0 59)", "pṛ0 60)") are omitted. Chapter 6 is Śiva's answer to Pārvatī about yoga (6.41 onwards): yoga is the unity of jīva and Ātman (6.43); the six passions hinder yoga (6.44). Stanzas 6.49–56 agree almost literally with Śāradātilaka 25.9–16 (see the block above); the differences are stated in the notes.

Literal translation

6.45–46. Having conquered them by these [limbs of yoga] (?), the yogins attain yoga. Yama, niyama, āsana and prāṇāyāma, then pratyāhāra, [that] called dhāraṇā, dhyāna together with samādhi — these they call the eight limbs in the practice of yoga for the yogin.

6.47. Non-injury, truthfulness, not stealing, chastity, compassion and uprightness, patience, fortitude, moderation in food and purity — such are the ten yamas.

6.48–49ab. Austerity, contentment, faith, generosity, worship of the deity, listening to the doctrine, modesty, reflection, repetition of the mantra and the fire oblation — these ten are named the niyamas by the experts in the discipline of yoga.

6.49cd–50ab. Padmāsana, called svastika, bhadra, vajrāsana, and also vīrāsana — thus is named, in order, the pentad of postures.

6.50cd–51. Having properly placed both soles on the thighs, then let him grasp with the hands, crosswise, both big toes — thus is named padmāsana, dear to the hearts of yogins.

6.52. Having properly placed both soles between the knees and the thighs, let the yogin remain with a straight body — this they call svastika.

6.53–54ab. Let him place both ankles utterly motionlessly at the sides of the seam; under the scrotum let him clasp with the hands the heels of the feet — bhadrāsana is declared, praised by the yogins.

6.54cd–55ab. Having placed both feet in order on the thighs, let him place onto the knees the hands with the fingers turned towards oneself — the unsurpassed vajrāsana is named.

6.55cd–56ab. Having placed one foot downward, and having then placed the other one on the thigh, let the yogin remain with a straight body — thus is declared vīrāsana.

6.56cd. Let him draw in the external air through iḍā in sixteen measures (mātrās).

Smooth translation

Having conquered the six passions, the yogins attain yoga. Yoga has eight limbs: yama, niyama, posture, prāṇāyāma, pratyāhāra, dhāraṇā, dhyāna and samādhi. The yamas are ten: non-injury, truthfulness, not stealing, chastity, compassion, uprightness, patience, fortitude, moderation in food and purity. The niyamas are likewise ten: austerity, contentment, faith, generosity, worship of the deity, listening to the doctrine, modesty, reflection, repetition of the mantra and the fire oblation.

The postures are five: padmāsana, svastika, bhadra, vajrāsana and vīrāsana. Padmāsana, dear to the hearts of yogins: the soles are placed on the thighs, and the big toes are grasped with crossed hands. Svastika: the soles are inserted between the knees and the thighs, and one sits straight. Bhadrāsana, praised by the yogins: the ankles are placed motionlessly at the sides of the perineum, and the hands clasp the heels under the scrotum. Vajrāsana, unsurpassed: the feet are placed on the thighs, and the hands — on the knees, fingers towards oneself. Vīrāsana: one foot is tucked underneath, the other is placed on the thigh, and one sits straight. Then prāṇāyāma begins: the external air is drawn in through iḍā in sixteen measures.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.
- Differences from Śāradātilaka 25.9–16 (M00077): in the list bhadra stands before vajra (bhadraṃ vajrāsanaṃ tathā, in the Śāradātilaka — vajraṃ bhadrāsanaṃ tathā); vased “let him remain” instead of viśed “let him sit”; pādapārṣṇiṃ “the heels of the feet” instead of pāṣṇīpādau “the heels and the feet”; parikīrtitam “praised” instead of pūjitaṃ param “the highest, revered”; nyasya “having placed” instead of nyasyet “let him place”; athetaram “then the other one” instead of tathetaram “likewise the other one”.

- On 6.51: Rāghavabhaṭṭa's commentary on the Śāradātilaka explains that the arms are thereby crossed behind the back (see the block above). The Gandharvatantra has no commentary of its own.
- The word jitvo in 6.45 I read as jitvā "having conquered". The editors' remark [gajñai?gāṅgai] proposes the readings yogajñaiḥ "connoisseurs of yoga" (with a question mark) or yogāṅgaiḥ "limbs of yoga". In the translation I follow the latter, with a caveat.
- In 6.46 dhāraṇākhyaṃ ("called dhāraṇā") — so in the file; in sense this is simply "dhāraṇā" within the list.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).
- 8.47 (Muktabodha M00646, file line 2566). Ritual posture, prohibition: na yatheṣṭāsano bhūyāt pūjākarmaṇi sādhakaḥ — "during the pūjā the sādhaka must not sit as he pleases". The neighbouring stanzas 8.38–57 are about rug-seats (material, size, the mantra to the Earth when sitting down).
- 8.58–61 (Muktabodha M00646, file lines 2590–2597). Ritual posture (the pūjā of Tripurā); with a description of padma and a list: > padadvayaṃ samaṃ samyag ūrudvayoparisthitam || 58 || savyaṃ pādam upādāya dakṣiṇopari vinyaset | viṣṭabhya kaṭyoḥ pārṣṇī tu nāsāgranyastalocanaḥ || 59 || padmāsanaṃ bhaved etat praśastaṃ tripurārcane | svastikaṃ gomukhaṃ caivam ūrdhvasvastikam eva vā || 60 || paryaṅkam āsanaṃ śastam evaṃ baddhāsanaḥ priye | paśyann abhīṣṭadevaṃ ca pādadoṣaṃ na paśyati || 61 || na yuktam anyathā pādadarśanaṃ surapūjane |

  The cross-legged postures are justified thus: the deity must not see the soles of the worshipper. Ūrdhvasvastika is a new name for the catalogue.
- 12.6 (Muktabodha M00646, file line 3278), dhyāna. Yogic posture; name only. — samakāyaśirogrīvaṃ kṛtāsanaparigrahaḥ.
- 12.12 (Muktabodha M00646, file line 3290). Ritual posture — bhadrāsanopaviṣṭāyāḥ (of the goddess who is mentally bathed); here bhadrāsana is rather an "honoured seat" than a posture.
- 18.32cd–33ab (Muktabodha M00646, file lines 4639–4640), japa. Ritual posture, with a description: > vāmorau dakṣapādaṃ ca vinyasya parameśvari | baddhavīrāsano mantrī diśaś cānavalokayan |

Word-by-word gloss

пӯрва-бӣджам — the previous bīja (here, seemingly, a rosary bead); джапан — repeating; йаҳ ту — who indeed; пара-бӣджам — the next bīja; ту — indeed; саṃспр̣ш́ет — touches; анӷушṭхена — with the thumb; бхавет — will be; тасйа ? татра — “his” or “there” (the editors have not decided how to read); нишпхалаҳ — fruitless; тасйа — his; тат-джапаҳ — this japa.

киṭи-ш́абда-анвитā — making the sound “kiṭi” (a clatter?); мāлā — rosary; чхинна-бхиннā — torn, split; апи вā — or else; бхавет — there are; вāма-ӯрау — onto the left thigh; дакша-пāдам — the right foot; ча — and; винйасйа — having placed; парамеш́вари — O Highest Mistress.

баддха-вӣрāсанаҳ — having assumed the vīra posture (the “locked” vīrāsana); мантрӣ — the mantrin; диш́аҳ — sideways; ча — and; анавалокайан — not looking; гуру-даивата-мантрāṇāм — of guru, deity and mantra; екам ? аикйам — one, unity (the editors have not decided how to read); саṃбхāвайан — comprehending, imagining; дхийā — with the mind.

атхавā — or else; чинтайет — let him think; мӯрдхни — at the crown of the head; гурум — of the guru; варṇа-āди-бхедатаҳ — according to the distinctions of colour (or letters) and the like; мантрам — the mantra; ча — and; каṇṭхатаҳ — in the throat; дхйāтвā — contemplating; чинтайан — thinking; хр̣ди — in the heart; деватāм — of the deity.

нигадена — by loud utterance; упāм̣ш́унā — in a whisper; вā — or; вāпи ка пāт̣хах̣ — “vāpi” is the reading of [manuscript] “ka” (editors’ remark); мāнасена — mentally; атхавā — or else; прийе — O dear one; джапа-āрамбхам — the beginning of the japa; судхӣх̣ — the wise one; курйāт — let him perform; деватā-бхāва-татпарах̣ — wholly intent on the envisioning of the deity.

Literal translation

18.31. Who, repeating the previous bīja, touches with the thumb the next bīja — for him (var.: “there”) this japa is fruitless.

18.32. Rosaries may be ones making the sound “kiṭi”, or else torn, split. And, having placed the right foot on the left thigh, O Highest Mistress,

18.33. having assumed the locked vīrāsana, the mantrin, not looking sideways, comprehending with the mind the unity (var.: “one”) of guru, deity and mantra,

18.34. or else let him think of the guru at the crown of the head — according to the distinctions of colour and the like, — and, contemplating the mantra in the throat, thinking of the deity in the heart,

18.35. loudly, in a whisper or else mentally, O dear one, — let the wise one begin the japa, wholly intent on the envisioning of the deity.

Smooth translation

Who, counting the rosary, brushes the next bead with the thumb — repeats the mantra in vain; there are also rosaries that clatter, or are torn or cracked [— they too are unfit]. Placing the right foot on the left thigh and sitting in vīrāsana, the mantrin does not look sideways and contemplates with the mind the unity of guru, deity and mantra. Or else he imagines the guru at the crown of the head, with his colour and other characteristics, the mantra — in the throat, and the deity — in the heart. Thus, intent on the deity, the wise one begins the japa — aloud, in a whisper or mentally.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.
- 18.32ab (about the rosaries) is connected with the preceding stanza, but the text has no predicate “unfit”. In the smooth translation it is supplied in square brackets as my addition.
- pūrvabījaṃ / parabījaṃ: at 18.30 there stands mālābījaṃ “the bīja of the rosary”. Therefore “bīja” here probably means a bead, but this follows from the context.

- vāmorau dakṣapādaṃ “the right foot on the left thigh” — the posture is named baddhavīrāsana. On this see part IV: Gandharva 18.33.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).
- 28.58 (Muktabodha M00646, file line 6316). Ritual posture, prohibition: nirāsanaḥ śayāno vā gacchann utthita eva vā | … na japet — “not to repeat the mantra without a seat, lying, walking or standing”.
- 36.30–34 (Muktabodha M00646, file lines 7414–7422). Yogic posture (the Kaula practice); with a description — sundarīmudrā: > sama āsana āsīnaḥ samakāyo yathāsukham || 30 || padmāsanasamāsīnaḥ sādhakaḥ śuddhacetanaḥ | prāṇasya śodhayen mārgaṃ… || 31 || hastāv ācchādya ādhārayogadaṇḍāvalambinau | nayane nāsikāprānte nimeṣonmeṣavarjite || 32 || … dantair dantāṃs tu saṃspṛśet | oṣṭhena cādharaṃ caiva jihvayā cātha tālukam || 33 || eṣā tu sundarīmudrā…

  Here the teeth are closed together — otherwise than in the Śaiva karaṇa (§ 14.4). The meaning of ādhārayogadaṇḍāvalambinau is unclear: possibly the arms “rest on the base and the yoga-staff”.

Word-by-word gloss

(3.180–182) āсанāни атха вакшйāми — of the postures further I shall tell; кармаṇā вихитена ту — prescribable by the rite; падмāсанам паушṭике ча — padmāsana — for strengthening; ш́āнтике свастикāсанам — for pacification — svastikāsana; āкṛшṭау паушṭике тадват — for attraction — the same as for strengthening; видвеше куккуṭāсанам — for hostility — the cock posture; ардха свастикам уччāṭе — for banishing — the half-svastika; ту ардха стхāпана пāршṇикам — that is: with the heel half-placed; мāраṇе стамбхане тадват — for killing [and] immobilising likewise; викаṭам парикӣртитам — vikaṭa is proclaimed; ваш́йе бхадрāсанам — for subjugation — bhadrāsana; тешāм катхйате ча атха бхāванā — and for them [further] the visualisation is explained.

(Bṛhannīla 6.179–182 — the differences) ваш́йе ча ева … ш́āнтике — both for subjugation and for pacification; āсанам свастикам проктам — as the posture svastika is named; сāкшāт сиддхикарам татхā — directly bestowing siddhis; āкṛшṭау ча … камбалам — and for attraction — [the posture] “blanket” (?); вīрāсанам … видвеше — for hostility — vīrāsana; уччāṭане мāраṇе ча вīрāсанам праш́асйате — for banishing and killing vīrāsana is praised.

(samayāstotra 69–70ab) падмāсанам свастике проктам — [corrupt; one expects “padmāsana — for pacification/strengthening”?]; викаṭам двешаṇе татхā — and vikaṭa — for hostility; стамбхане куккуṭаҳ видйāт — for immobilising know the cock; ваджрам йат ваш́йа кармаṇи — and vajra — that for subjugation [sic].

Literal translation

Next I shall tell of the postures prescribed by the rites: padmāsana — for strengthening, svastikāsana — for pacification; for attraction — the same as for strengthening; for hostility — the cock posture; for banishing — the half-svastika, that is, with the heel half-placed; for killing [and] immobilising likewise vikaṭa is proclaimed; for subjugation — bhadrāsana; and for them the visualisation is explained further.

Padmāsana for strengthening, O great goddess; both for subjugation and for pacification, O mistress, svastika is named as the posture, directly bestowing siddhis; and for attraction — the “blanket” (?); for hostility vīrāsana is named; for banishing and for killing vīrāsana is praised; for pacification, strengthening and subjugation [the same?], O beautiful one [the line is corrupt].

[The lines are corrupt:] “padmāsana … is named … and vikaṭa — for hostility; for immobilising know the cock, and vajra — that for subjugation”.

Smooth translation

The postures by rites: for strengthening and attraction — padmāsana; for pacification — svastika; for hostility — the cock posture; for banishing — the half-svastika (that is, with the heel half-lifted); for killing and immobilising — vikaṭa; for subjugation — bhadra. The text then goes on to the visualisation of the deities.

In the Bṛhannīla the distribution is different: for strengthening — padmāsana; for subjugation and pacification — svastika; for attraction — the “blanket posture” (kambala — if this is a posture at all and not a blanket-seat); for hostility, banishing and killing — the “hero” posture. The last line of stanza 182 is corrupt in the e-text.

From the manuscript samayāstotra: the assignment of postures to the same six acts — the text is corrupt, but vikaṭa (for hostility), the cock (for immobilising) and vajra (for subjugation) can be discerned. The next line: “māraṇe bhadrakaṃ vidyād āsanaṃ ṣaṭ prakīrtitam” — “for killing know bhadraka (?)… six postures are told”, — so here too six postures in all; compare the close distribution in Śāradātilaka 23.131 (its block above).

Notes

- The Bṛhannīla’s distribution differs noticeably from the Phetkāriṇī’s (in the latter the cock is for hostility, vikaṭa for killing, whereas here vīrāsana is for hostility, banishing and killing); “kambala” (“blanket”) is nowhere else so attested and may be not a posture but an object (a blanket-seat) — a similar case is the makuṭa tortoise (see the Makuṭa block).
- The mapping of the distribution tables in the Phetkāriṇī, the Bṛhannīla, Śāradātilaka 23.131 and the samayāstotra differs: the Śākta texts give no single “correct” scheme.

- Merutantra (Muktabodha e-text no. M00195, keyed from the edition: śrīvenkateśvara, Bombay, 1908; line numbers in that file: 9207–9327) — the same, with definitions in brackets (from the Śāradātilaka).

Source: Muktabodha M00195, file lines 9205–9327.

Unlike the Phetkāriṇī (its block) and Śāradātilaka 23.131, the Merutantra stipulates for each rite: the direction, the maṇḍala, the deity, the mudrā, the material of the seat — and the posture. The postures: śānti → padma; vaśya → svastika; stambha → vikaṭa; vidveṣa → kukkuṭa; uccāṭana → vajra; māraṇa → bhadra. In brackets stand the editor's glosses with the definitions — they agree in content (and partly verbatim) with Śāradātilaka 25 (padma), Mantrakaumudī 5837–5840 (vikaṭa, kukkuṭa, bhadra) and KKM 30758+ (vajra). Only the six pinpoint places are given; the full rules are in the e-text.

Literal translation

Having turned to the north, he performs pacification; at pacification Rati is worshipped and the lotus mudrā is shown; having bound padmāsana, [he remains], having bowed [to the goddess]; the mantra at pacification [sic namontaḥ]; at pacification [the seat of] kuśa grass is taken [gloss: the right foot onto the left knee, the left foot onto the right knee let him place].

Vāṇī let him worship at subjugation; he shows the noose mudrā; sitting in svastikāsana, he utters the mantra ending in svāhā; goat hide — [the seat] at subjugation [in another book — rhinoceros hide]; he offers the oblation with the antelope mudrā; here the offering substances are red, the contemplation of the red one.

[Seated] in vikaṭāsana [gloss: both arms to be placed between the knees and the shanks; this is vikaṭāsana by the definition of the sages], he shows Durgā the mace mudrā; at immobilising vaṣaṭ ends the mantra at the offering; the seat at stambha is of elephant hide; with [the same] mace mudrā he brings the offerings.

The oblation mantra ending in phaṭ there he utters in kukkuṭakāsana [gloss: having made first utkaṭāsana, the feet even together, both arms inside the knees — it is called kukkuṭāsana]; at hostility — the seat of jackal skin or of iron.

Having mounted vajrāsana [gloss: having placed both feet in order onto the thighs, the fingers [of the feet] turned towards the knees, having placed both hands — the highest vajrāsana is declared], and [he utters the mantra] ending in phaṭ at the offering; [this] is recommended with hastened foes.

Turned to the south he performs, worshipping Bhadrakālī; he shows the sword mudrā; let him enter bhadrāsana [gloss: having placed both ankles at the sides of the "sīvinī-thread", utterly motionless; the nāḍī between the anus and the member is called "sīvinī"; there having placed the ankle, having bound with the hands the foreparts of the feet under the testicles — this is bhadrāsana]; with the mantra ending in huṃ [he brings the offerings]; the seat — of buffalo hide or iron; the "sow" mudrā, śūkarī (?); the contemplation of Kālī.

Smooth translation

Turned to the north, he performs pacification: Rati is worshipped, the lotus mudrā is shown; sitting in bound padmāsana, with a bow he [utters the mantra]; the seat — [per the gloss: cowhide, "from another book"; the text itself: kuśa grass]. The gloss gives the definition of padma: the right foot on the left knee, the left one on the right.

The formula "sitting in svastikāsana, he utters the mantra ending in svāhā"; the seat at vaśya — goat hide (in another reading — rhinoceros); the deities and the offering colours are red.

In vikaṭāsana — to show the mace mudrā to Durgā; the seat — elephant hide; the gloss defines vikaṭa as "the arms between the knees and the shanks" (this definition is the same as in Mantrakaumudī 5837–5838).

Sitting in kukkuṭāsana, he performs the mantra ending in phaṭ; the gloss defines it through utkaṭāsana with the arms inserted inside the knees. The seat at hostility — of jackal skin or iron.

Sitting in vajrāsana — he performs the mantra ending in phaṭ; the gloss: the feet on the thighs, the fingers [of the feet] towards the knees, the hands lowered — "the highest vajra". The seat — deer hide (the vāyavya rite).

Turned to the south, he worships Bhadrakālī and shows the sword mudrā; the sitting — in bhadrāsana: per the gloss, this is the posture with the ankles at the sides of the "sīvinī" channel (between the anus and the member), the heels under the testicles, with the hands binding the foreparts of the feet. The seat — of buffalo hide or iron; the mudrā — śūkarī; the contemplation — Kālī.

Notes

- The editor's posture-definition ("the right one onto the left knee, the left one onto the right") is the padma of Śāradātilaka 25.9–12 (v. 11ab), not the padma of the Mantramārga (the feet on the thighs).
- The definition of vajra here is "the feet on the thighs" (closer to padma!), and not the "Nāradīya" variant of Mantrakaumudī 22 ("the ankle above the perineum": the same as the siddhāsana of the Haṭhapradīpikā) — this divergence of definitions is additional evidence of the shifting terminology.

- The “sīvinī” gloss agrees verbatim with Mantrakaumudī 5840 and KKM 30785–30787 (“sīvanyāḥ pārśvayoḥ”, “gudaliṃgayormadhye yā nāḍī sīvinītyucyate”) — one more direct coincidence of the six definitions between the Mantrakaumudī and the late anthologies Merutantra/KKM, showing their common source.

3.5. Vārāhītantra (M00317, ch. 26) and the Ācārasāratantra manuscript (M00501): the Haṭha-yoga block and pīṭha = āsana

⚠ Correction (context cross-check, 14.10.2026). Lines 1–1085 of the file M00501 are not the Ācārasāratantra, but the Haṭhapradīpikā itself (upadeśas 1–4). It was copied into the same NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) manuscript B 116/8 before the tantra. The Muktabodha description says: «The manuscript contains 4 chapters of the haṭhapradīpakā followed by the ācārasāratantra». The text bears colophons of the Haṭhapradīpikā: ityātmārāmayogīndraviracitāyāṃ haṭhapradīpikāyāṃ … (Muktabodha e-text no. M00501, keyed from a manuscript: NGMCP 3-325 Reel B 116/8; line number in that file: 511, Muktabodha M00501, file line 940, Muktabodha M00501, file line 1085). The Ācārasāra proper begins at Muktabodha M00501, file line 1086 (atha samyak pravakṣyāmi kāmākṣā śavarīritaṃ), and its ch. 1 ends at Muktabodha M00501, file line 3535. Therefore the posture block below bears witness to the Haṭhapradīpikā, not to the tantra. It is retained only for comparison with Vārāhī 26, where the same block truly stands inside the tantra.

In the Ācārasāra proper (and in the appended Samayācāra) postures are mentioned only thus: * Muktabodha M00501, file line 2623 — tato devīṃ smaranmaṃtrī kusūlāṃtarviśeddhruvaṃ | tatra vaddhāsano yogī śītavādhāmupekṣya hi (= baddhāsano, śītabādhām) — the rite in the straw hut (kusūla): “having bound a posture”, to endure the cold. Ritual posture; name only. * Muktabodha M00501, file lines 4742–4744 (samayāstotra, after the Ācārasāra colophon at Muktabodha M00501, file line 4525) — the assignment to the six acts: padmāsanaṃ svastike prokteṃ vikaṭaṃ dveṣaṇe tathā | staṃbhane kukkuṭo vidyādvajrayedvasya karmaṇi || 70 || māraṇe bhadrakaṃ vidyā dāsanaṃ ṣaṭ prakīrtitaṃ || [sic; ≈ vajraṃ vaśyakarmaṇi … vidyād āsanaṃ]. Cf. Śāradātilaka 23.131 and § 3.4. Ritual posture; name only.

Haṭhapradīpikā 1.17–55 in the manuscript M00501 (Muktabodha M00501, file lines 36–180; formerly erroneously “Ācārasāra 1.17–55”). Yogic posture; with a description. The postures: * svastika (19), gomukha (20), vīra (21), kūrma (22), kukkuṭa (23); * uttānakūrmaka (24), dhanur (25), matsyendra (26–27); * paścimatāna (28–29), mayūra (30–31), śava (32); * “caturāśīty āsanāni śivena kathitāni” (33); * siddha, padma, bhadra, siṃha (34): siddhāsana (35–43) with its synonyms. In the e-text they are corrupt (anyevajñāsanaṃ … muktāprāṇaṃ … guptāsanaṃ); in the Vārāhī — vajrāsanaṃ … suktāsanaṃ … guptāsanaṃ; padma (44–49); siṃha (50…).

Here pīṭha is used as a synonym of posture: > matsyendrapīṭhaṃ jaṭharapra[dīptiṃ]… (27) > > … khemāyūra metat pravadaṃti pīṭhaṃ (30) [= khe māyūram etat pravadanti pīṭham] > > caturāśīti pīṭheṣu siddham eva sadābhyaset (39) > > śramadairvahubhiḥ pīṭhaiḥ kiṃ syāt siddhāsane sati (41)

The same block stands in Vārāhītantra 26 (Muktabodha e-text no. M00317, keyed from a manuscript: NGMCP manuscript no.: 3-315 Reel No. B 144/9; line numbers in that file: 12100–12447: «kimādyair bahubhiḥ pīṭhaiḥ sadā siddhāsane sati», «paścimatānena», «vajrāsana sthito yogī…»). In the same Haṭhapradīpikā part of M00501 (not a tantra): Haṭhapradīpikā 2.49 (Muktabodha M00501, file line 395) vadhvā vajrāsanaṃ and Haṭhapradīpikā 4.67 (Muktabodha M00501, file line 982) muktāsane sthito yogī mudrāṃ saṃdhāya śāṃbhavīṃ.

Whose borrowing this is. The block itself occupies in the Vārāhītantra two chapters (26–27) — from svastika (verse ~29 of chapter 26) to the khecarī mudrā and beyond (chapter 27); the colophons of both chapters speak precisely of the Vārāhītantra («iti śrīvārāhītaṃtre dakṣiṇāmnāyanirvāṇapade ṣaḍviṃśati paṭalaḥ», Muktabodha M00317, file line 12712; «…saptaviṃśatitama paṭalaḥ», : 13327) — that is, this is not an accidentally glued-in alien manuscript, but text adopted by the tantra. According to H. P. Shastri's description (the catalogue of Nepalese manuscripts; retold in the article "The Vārāhī Tantra", wisdomlib.org), chapters 26–27 absorbed nearly the entire Haṭhayogapradīpikā — which matches what is visible in M00317: after the āsanas come the kumbhakas śītalī, bhastrikā, bhramarī, mūrcchā, plāvinī and the sahita/kevala distinction in the order of Haṭhapradīpikā chapter 2, then mahāmudrā and khecarī after chapter 3. Since the Haṭhapradīpikā was composed about the middle of the 15th century, while the Vārāhītantra is a late compilation (terminus ante quem AD 1775; not later than the 16th century), the borrowing certainly runs this way: the tantra copied the Haṭhapradīpikā (or its immediate text), not the other way round. The Haṭhapradīpikā itself as a standalone text is not translated here (the reader already has it in translation), but in the form in which the tantra quotes it — with all sic distortions and variant readings — the whole āsana section is translated below (and collated with the Haṭhapradīpikā copy inside the Ācārasāratantra manuscript, M00501).

Verses with translation: Vārāhītantra, chapter 26: the āsana chapter copied from the Haṭhapradīpikā (Haṭhapradīpikā 1.17–55), in the form in which it stands in the tantra; beside it, the readings of the Haṭhapradīpikā copy manuscript (M00501)

The Vārāhītantra is a late compilation, and its chapters 26–27 are copied wholesale from Svātmārāma's Haṭhapradīpikā (mid-15th c.): chapter 26 begins directly with Haṭhapradīpikā 1.17 and after the āsanas passes to the kumbhakas and mudrās (Haṭhapradīpikā chapters 2–3). Translated here is the āsana section in the form in which it stands in the tantra (M00317): the transmission is severely distorted in places, the verses are unnumbered; the Haṭhapradīpikā correspondences are given in brackets. Systematically collated is the second manuscript version — the Haṭhapradīpikā copy proper (upadeśa 1, verses 17–55 with numbering) inside the Ācārasāratantra manuscript (Muktabodha M00501, file lines 36–185); its readings are given in the notes. The standard (printed) text of the Haṭhapradīpikā is not translated here: the user already has it; only how this text is borrowed by the tantras is translated. In the Vārāhī two āsanas of Haṭhapradīpikā 1.28–31 (paścimatāna and mayūra) are omitted — they are given after M00501 with a caveat.

Word-by-word gloss

(the opening) бхаирава ува̄ча — Bhairava said [the editorial heading of the new chapter]; курӣа̄т тат а̄санам тасма̄т а̄рогйам ча анґа лаґхавам — [hearken:] āsana [brings] health and lightness of the body (the Vārāhī's reading: "tasmāt" sic instead of "sthairyam", the half-verses transposed; cf. the edition of the Haṭhapradīpikā copy in M00501 stanza 18: «tat kuryādāsanasthairyamārogyaṃ cāṃgalāghavaṃ» — "do the āsana, [which gives] stability, health and lightness of the body"); ваш́ишт̣ха а̄дйаиx̣ ча мунибхиx̣ матсйа индра а̄дйаиx̣ ча йогибхиx̣ — by the sages beginning with Vasiṣṭha and the yogins beginning with Matsyendra; анґӣкр̣та̄ни а̄сана̄ни катхйанте ка̄ни чит сада̄ — [certain] postures, accepted [by them], are explained [by this tantra] ["sadā" sic for "mayā"].

(svastika) джа̄ну ӯрвоx̣ антаре самйак кр̣тва̄ па̄да тале убхе — both feet properly placed between the knees and the thighs ["jānurcor-" a sic transmission]; р̣джука̄йаx̣ [sic р̣тука̄йаx̣] сам а̄сӣнаx̣ свастикам тат прачакшате [sic for прачакшмахе?] — with a straight body, calmly seated — this they declare to be svastika.

(vīra) екам пāдам татхā екасмин винйасйа ӯруṇи саṃстхитам — one foot placed on one thigh; итарасмим [sic итараш́миṃ] татхā ча екам вӣрāсанам ити ӣритам — and on the other [thigh] likewise the other one — so is declared vīrāsana [sic word-splitting].

(kūrma) гудам ниш пӣдйа гулпхāбхйāм вйут крамеṇа самāхитаҳ — having squeezed the perineum with the ankles in crossed [order], concentrated [sic transmission “niṣpīḍā”, “vyuktameṇa”]; кӯрма āсанам бхавет етат ити йога видаҳ видаҳ — this is the “tortoise”, so those who know yoga know.

(kukkuṭa) падмāсанам ту саṃстхāпйа джāну ӯрвоҳ антаре караиҳ — having established padmāsana, with the hands between the knees and the thighs [→ thrusting the hands through up to the forearms]; винйасйа бхӯмау саṃстхāпйа вйомастхаҳ куккуṭāсанам — having placed [them] on the ground, [so that the body is] in the air — [this is] the cock posture.

(uttānakūrmaka) куккуṭāсана [меж] стхаҳ ӯддха [«р» сич] урбхйāсāм ваṃдхйакам дхарā — staying inside the cock [posture], with both arms firmly having bound the neck [sic along the whole line]; сит [sic сате] кӯрма ват уттāна(ҳ) етат уттāна кӯрмакам — lying on the back, like a tortoise [upside-down], — this is the “up-tortoise”.

(dhanur) пāда анґушṭхау ту бāхубхйāм [sic вāхубхйāм] грхӣтвā ш́раваṇа авадхи — the big toes with both arms having grasped, up to the ears; дхануҳ ākаршаṇам курйāт дхануҳ āсанам учйате — the drawing of a bow let him make — it is called the bow posture.

(paścimatāna (after M00501)) пра сāрйа пāдау бхуви даṇда рӯпау — having stretched the legs on the ground, like staffs; дорбхйāм ча пāда двитайам грхӣтвā — and with both arms having grasped both feet; джāнӯ пари нйаста лалāṭа деш́аҳ — having laid the forehead on the knees; виш́ет идам паш́чиматā нам [sic for паш́чиматāнаṃ] āхуҳ — this they call the “western [chord/stretch]”; паванам паш́чима вāханам кароти — it makes the vital air go along the “western [channel]”; ударам джаṭхара аналасйа курйāт ударе кāршйам арогатāм ча пуṃсāм — it makes the belly [full] of the digestive fire, [gives] leanness and health to a man.

(mayūra (after M00501)) дхарāм авашṭабхйа кара стхалāбхйāм — leaning on the ground with the palms; тат кӯрпара стхāпита нāбхи пāршваḥ — the sides of the navel set upon those elbows; учча āсана даṇда ват уттхитаḥ — having risen [with the body], like a stick, in the high posture [sic]; кхе māйӯрам етат правадanти пīṭхам — this they call the “peacock in the air”, [this] posture [pīṭha = posture].

(śava) уттāна шава ват бхӯмау шаманам [sic for шайанам] ча савāсанам [sic for шавāсанам] — lying face up, like a corpse, on the ground — śavāsana [sic: «sa-āsanam» twice]; шавāсанам шāнти харам читта вишāнти кāракам — śavāsana removes fatigue and leaves the mind rested.

(the 84 and the four) чатур āшīти āсанāни шивена катхитāни ту — [yes,] eighty-four postures are told by Śiva [the Sanskrit numeral sic: “bhyāsanāni”]; тебхйаḥ чатушкам āдāйа сāра бхӯтам бравӣми ахам — from them taking a four, the essential I shall tell; сиддхам падмам татхā симхам бхадрам ча ити чатушṭайам — siddha, padma, siṃha and bhadra — the four; шрешṭхам татра двайам тишṭхет падма симхāсане садā — [and] of them the best two [in] padmāsana and siṃhāsana [sic] abide always.

(siddha 1) йони стхāна кама амгхри мӯла гхаṭитам кṛтвā дṛдхам — into the “place of the yoni gates” [the perineum] firmly having set the heel [sic “kama aṃghri”]; винйасе медхре [sic] пāдам атха екам ева нийатам кṛтвā самам виграхам — and the other foot having placed on top, firmly; the body even (?); стхāнуḥ саṃ йамита индрийаḥ чала дṛшā пашйан бхрувораṃтарам [sic scattered] — unmoving, having curbed the senses, with an unwavering gaze looking at the point between the brows; етат мокша капāṭа бхеда джанакам сиддхāсанам прочйате — this is the posture called that of the perfected, producing the breaking of the gates of liberation.

(the synonyms) етат сиддхāсанам прāхуḥ анйе ваджрāсанаṃ видуḥ — this [posture] some call siddhāsana, others know it [as] vajrāsana; суктāсанам ваданти еке прāхуḥ гуптāсанам паре — “suktāsana” [sic for muktāsana] say others still, and guptāsana — yet others.

(the primacy of siddha) йамешу ива митāхāраḥ [sic without connection] ахиṃсā нийамешу ива — like moderate eating among the yamas, like non-violence among the niyamas; мукхйам сарва āсанешу екам сиддхāḥ сиддхāсанам видуḥ — the chief [single one] among all āsanas — siddhāsana, so the siddhas know; чатур āшīти пīṭхешу сиддхам ева садā абхйасет — among the [whole 84 posture-]“benches” (pīṭha = posture!) practise always only siddhāsana; дви саптати сахасрāни нāдīнāм мала шодхане — [for] the cleansing of the 72 000 channels from impurities [sic case];

ātma дхйāйī митāхāрī йāват двāдаш́а ватсарам — gazing into oneself, moderate in food, over twelve years; садā сиддхāсана абхйāсāт йогинī прāптим āпнуйāт [sic forms] — from the constant practice of siddhāsana the yogin attains success.

(why others) ким āдйаиḥ бахубхиḥ пīṭхаиḥ садā сиддхāсане сати — what, then, [others? sic “ādyair”] the many other [posture-]benches, if siddhāsana exists; прāṇāниле сāвадхāне варддхе [sic] кевала куṃбхаке — [when] the prāṇā-air attentively [grows? sic] in kevala-kumbhaka [M00501: «vaddhe»]; урудйанте [sic] ви нибхйāсā свайам ева унманī йатхā — and when it rises without effort of itself, like the “mind-less” [sic word by word]; татхā екасмин ева дṛдхе ваддхе сиддхāсане садā — so also in the single firmly-“bound” siddhāsana constantly [sic endings].

(nothing equals) бандха трайам анāйāсāт [sic «санāйāсāт»] свайам ева упаджāйате — the triple lock is born of itself, without effort; на ча āсанам сиддха садṛш́ам на куṃбхам садṛш́аḥ [sic word-splitting] нилаḥ [sic for нīлаḥ?] — and there is no āsana equal to siddhāsana, and no [air/kumbhaka] equal [sic disintegrated]; на кхечарī самā мудрā на нāда садṛш́аḥ лайаḥ [sic «лайаṃḥ»] — there is no mudrā equal to khecarī, no dissolution equal to [dissolution in] nāda.

(the padma variant) уттāнау чараṇау кṛтвā ūру саṃдхау прайатнатаḥ — the feet, soles turned upward, having placed on the thighs with effort; ūру мадхйе татхā уттāнау пāṇау [sic пāṇау=«пāṇī»] кṛтвā татаḥ дрш́ау [sic for чибукам?] — and in the middle of the thighs the palms [upwards] having placed, then [the chin? sic]; нāсā агре винйасет дṛшṭīх [sic дṛшṭī] даṃта мūлам ча джихвайā — on the tip of the nose let him place the gaze, and to the base of the teeth — with the tongue [let him touch]; уддхṛтйа чибукам вакше стхāпайет пачанаиḥ ш́анаиḥ [sic «пачанаиш́анаиḥ»] — having raised the chin, at the chest [the air] let him [mantram?] slowly set [the sic ending unclear]; идам падмāсанам проктам сарва вйāдхи винāш́анам — this is named padmāsana, destroying all diseases; дурлабхам йена кенāпи дхīматā лабхйате бхуви — which is attained on earth by hardly anyone, and only by a clever one.

(padma-prāṇāyāma) кṛтвā саṃпуṭитау карау дṛдхатарам — having made the hands [palms] folded very firmly; бадхвā ту падмāсанам — having bound padmāsana; гāдхам вакшаси саннидхāйа чибукам дхйāнам ча тат четаси — deep at the chest having placed the chin and meditation in that mind; свā * … [sic a lacuna] апāнам ūрддхам анилам проллāсайат пūритам мун̃чан — again and again driving the apāna

[the downward air] as an upward wind, releasing it filled [sic the whole line]; прāṇам упаити бодхам атулам ш́актим прабодхайет [sic word-splitting] — delving into the prāṇa, let him awaken the incomparable [kuṇḍalinī-]power; падмāсане стхитаҳ йогī нāдī двāреṇа пӯрайет мāрутам — sitting in padmāsana, the yogin let him fill the wind through the gate of the channel; йаҳ ту пибати самуктаҳ [sic for мучйате] на атра саṃш́айаҳ — and who so “drinks”, he is liberated [sic samuktaḥ], of this there is no doubt.

(bhadra) гулпхау [sic гулпхо ча вр̣шаṇа сйāдхаҳ] ча вр̣шаṇасйа адхаҳ сӣвинйāҳ пāрш́вайоҳ кшипет — and both ankles under the testicles, at the sides of the “sīvinī”, let him place; пāрш́ва пāдау ча пāṇибхйāм др̣дхам баддхвā су ниш́чалам — and both sideward feet with both hands firmly having bound, motionless; бхадрāсанам бхавет етат сарва вйāдхи нāш́анам [sic «ететат сарваṃ вйāдхи нāш́анаṃ»] — this is bhadrāsana, the destruction of all diseases; горакшāсанам ити āхуҳ идам ваи сиддха йогинаҳ — they call the same the “posture of Gorakṣa”, [so] the siddhī-yogins.

(the close) евам āсана бандхешу йогӣндраҳ вигата ш́рамаҳ — thus [exercising] in the bindings of the āsanas, the best of yogins [is rid] of fatigue; атха абхйасет нāдī ш́уддхам мудрā āди павана крийāм — then let him practise the cleansing of the channels, the mudrās and the disciplining of the air; крийā йуктасйа сиддхиҳ сйāт а крийасйа катхам бхавет — who has effective practice — his is success; and who is without — whence?; на ш́āстра пāṭха мātреṇа йога сиддхиҳ праджāйате — not from the mere reading of scripture is yogic success born; на веша дхāраṇам сиддхеҳ кāраṇам на ча тат катхā — not the wearing of [ascetic] garb is the cause of success, and not talk about it; крийā ева кāраṇам сиддхеҳ сатйам етат на саṃш́айаҳ — practice (kriyā) alone is the cause of success; this is the truth, doubt not; пӣṭхāни кумбхакаҳ читрам мудрā āди караṇāни ча — [but there are also] the posture-“benches” (pīṭha!), kumbhaka, the wondrous mudrās and movements [sic “pīṭhāti”]; сарвасйа вихита а бхйāсе рāджа йога пхала авадхи — all this [lasts] until in practice the fruit of rāja-yoga is attained [sic with lacunae].

Literal translation

Bhairava said: "…" [sic]. That āsana [sic tasmāt], health and lightness of the limbs; the postures accepted by the sages beginning with Vasiṣṭha and the yogins beginning with Matsyendra are explained [by this tantra].

Both feet properly placed between the knees and the thighs, with a straight body [sic ṛtukāyaḥ], calmly seated — this they declare [sic pracakṣate] to be svastika.

The right ankle under the left [side] at the back by the sides let him fit, the left one — likewise on the right: the "cow's face" (gomukha), so [called].

One foot placed on one thigh, and on the other likewise the other one, — so is declared vīrāsana.

Having squeezed the perineum with the ankles in crossed [order], concentrated, — this is the "tortoise" posture, so those who know yoga know.

Having established padmāsana, the hands between the knees and the thighs [thrust through], placed on the ground, [the body] hanging in the air, — [this is] the cock posture.

Staying in the midst of the cock posture, with both arms [firmly] having tied [sic], lying backward belly-up, like a tortoise, — this is the "up-tortoise".

Having grasped the big toes with both hands [lying face down], draw up to the ears as a bow — this is called the bow posture.

Having placed the right foot near the root of the left thigh, the left one wrapped outside the knee [sic], firmly holding on, let him stand (?) strongly turned — this is called the posture told by the glorious Matsyanātha. This "bench of Matsyendra" kindles the digestive fire, [sic] the destroyer of the circle of diseases, by practice gives a man the awakening of kuṇḍalinī and the firmness of the [body-]staff.

Having stretched the legs on the ground like staffs, and with both arms having grasped both feet, having laid the forehead on the knees, — this they call the "western" one [paścimatāna]; it directs the prāṇa along the western path, gives the fire of digestion, leanness and health to a man. Leaning on the ground with the palms, having set the sides of the navel upon the elbows, having risen [with the body] like a stick [aloft], — this they call the "peacock in the air" — [this] posture [pīṭha!].

Lying face up, like a corpse, on the ground, — śavāsana; śavāsana destroys fatigue and leaves the mind rested.

Eighty-four postures are told by Śiva; from them taking a four, I shall tell the essential: siddha, padma, siṃha and bhadra — the four; and of them, the two best [sic] — padmāsana and siṃhāsana — hold to always.

Firmly having set the heel into the "yoni-place" [the perineum; sic], the other foot placed on top, firmly, with an even (?) body, unmoving, the senses curbed, with an unwavering gaze looking at the point between the brows, — this is what is called siddhāsana, producing the breaking of the gates of liberation [the line with * lacunae — sic].

Above the virile member having placed the left ankle, and on top of it — the other ankle laid, — this is siddhāsana.

This [posture] some call siddhāsana, others know it as vajrāsana; “suktāsana” others still call it, and guptāsana (“hidden”) — yet others.

Like moderate eating among the yamas, like non-violence among the niyamas, — the chief among all āsanas is siddhāsana, so the siddhas know. Among the 84 [posture-]“benches” practise always only siddhāsana — for the cleansing of the 72 000 channels. Gazing into oneself, moderate in food, over twelve years, from the constant practice of siddhāsana the yogin attains success.

What, then, [sic “ādyair”] the many other [posture-]benches, if siddhāsana exists? [When] the prāṇā [attentively grows? sic] in kevala-kumbhaka — of itself it arises, like the “unmanī” [the mind-less state]; so also in the single firmly bound siddhāsana.

And the triple lock [bandhas] is born of itself, without efforts. [For] there is no posture equal to siddhāsana; there is no [sic blurred] equal to kumbhaka; there is no mudrā equal to khecarī; there is no dissolution equal to [dissolution] in the [inner] sound (nāda).

Having placed the right foot on the left thigh, and the left one likewise in [reverse] order [sic], firmly holding with both hands the big toes [of the feet], having placed [the hands] at the heart, the chin [at the chest], looking at the tip of the nose, — this is called the padmāsana of the self-restrained, destroying diseases.

Having laid the feet soles-up on the thighs with effort, and in the middle of the thighs — the palms [upwards], then [sic], on the tip of the nose let him place the gaze, and to the base of the teeth — with the tongue; having raised the chin, at the chest [the air] let him slowly fill (?) [sic]. This is named padmāsana, destroying all diseases, — which on earth only some few, and only a clever one, [to others] gives.

Having folded the hands very firmly, having bound padmāsana, deep at the chest having placed the chin and meditation [concentration] in that mind, again and again lifting the downward air upward, filling [releasing? sic], let him, delving into the prāṇa, awaken the incomparable power. Sitting in padmāsana, the yogin let him fill the air through the gates of the channels; and who so “drinks”, he is liberated [sic], of this there is no doubt.

Both ankles under the testicles let him place at the sides of the “sīvinī”, the right [sic] the left ankle — crosswise; both hands set upon the knees [sic “bhuja-aнu”], the fingers straightened, with open mouth let him gaze, the eyes resting on the tip of the nose: this is [sic] siṃhāsana, always revered by the yogins; it binds the triple lock [bandha], [this] best of postures.

Both ankles under the testicles, at the sides of the “sīvinī”, let him place; and both sideward feet with both hands firmly having bound, motionless: this is bhadrāsana, the destruction of all diseases; they call the same the “posture of Gorakṣa”, so say the siddhī-yogins.

Thus [having accustomed himself] to the bindings of the āsanas, the best of yogins is rid of fatigue; then let him practise the cleansing of the channels, the mudrās and the retaining of the air. Who has effective practice — his is success; and who is without — whence? Not from the mere reading of scripture is yogic success born. Not the wearing of [ascetic] garb is the cause of success, and not talk about it: practice alone is the cause of success; this is the truth, doubt not. [Thus —] the posture-“benches”, kumbhaka, the wondrous mudrās and movements: all this [is needed] until the fruit of the royal yoga is attained [sic].

Smooth translation

Bhairava said: [the posture gives] health and lightness of the body. The āsanas accepted by the sages beginning with Vasiṣṭha and the yogins beginning with Matsyendra are [now] explained.

Put both feet away between the knees and the thighs, sit with a straight body, calmly — this is svastika. [sic: “ratūkāya”]

Having fitted the right ankle by the side of the back under the left one, and the left one — likewise on the right, — this is the “cow’s face” posture.

One foot on one thigh, the other one on the other: such is vīra.

Pressing the perineum with the ankles crosswise, to sit concentrated — those versed in yoga know this as the “tortoise” posture.

In padma thrust the hands between the knees and the thighs down to the ground and hold the body aloft — this is the cock posture.

[Having sat] into the cock posture [i.e. with the arms passed between the thighs and the shanks], having embraced the neck with the bent arms, lie on the back, like an overturned tortoise, — this is the “up-tortoise” (uttānakūrmaka). [The transmission is corrupt; the sense is after M00501.]

Having seized the big toes with both hands, draw to the ears, like a bow, — this is the bow posture.

The right foot near the root of the left thigh, the left one wrapped outside the right knee; take hold [with the hand] and turn strongly — this is the posture pointed out by the glorious Matsyanātha. It, the “bench of Matsyendra”, kindles the digestive fire, is the destroyer of the whole circle of diseases, and from it — the awakening of kuṇḍalinī and the steadfastness of the body.

The legs stretched out like staffs, the feet in the hands, the forehead on the knees — the “western” āsana: it drives the prāṇa along the “western” channel, kindles the digestion, makes one lean and heals. The palms on the ground, the navel on the bent elbows, the body aloft like a stick, — the “peacock in the air”.

Lie on your back on the ground, like a corpse, — the corpse āsana: it removes tiredness and gives the mind peace.

Eighty-four postures are described by Śiva; of them I select the essential four: siddha, padma, siṃha, bhadra; and of them the two — padma and siṃha — practise constantly.

The heel firmly pressed to the perineum, the other foot on top of it, the body [unmoving], the senses curbed, the gaze unmoving at the point between the brows — this is siddhāsana, breaking open the gates of liberation.

The left ankle pressed to the perineum above the virile member, on top of it — the right one: this is siddhāsana.

Some call it siddhāsana, others — vajrāsana, still others — “sukta” [sic, the Vārāhī’s reading], others again — guptāsana.

As among the yamas the chief thing is moderate eating, and among the niyamas — non-violence, so among all āsanas the chief single one is siddhāsana, as the siddhas hold. Of all the eighty-four “benches” practise always only siddhāsana: it purifies the seventy-two thousand channels. The yogin who contemplates himself, moderate in food, in twelve years of constant practice of siddhāsana attains success.

What need of many other “benches”, when siddhāsana exists? [sic, but the sense from the context and M00501: «śramadairvahubhiḥ pīṭhaiḥ kiṃ syāt siddhāsane sati» — “what need of other ‘benches’, [which bring] fatigue, if siddhāsana exists”]. [When] in kevala-kumbhaka the prāṇā rises without effort and itself reaches the “mind-less” state, — the same [is attainable] in the single firm siddhāsana.

From [siddhāsana] alone the triple lock of the bandhas is born of itself, without effort. There is no posture equal to siddhāsana; no kumbhaka equal [sic]; no mudrā equal to khecarī; no equal dissolution [of the mind] in nāda.

The right foot on the left thigh, the left one — on the right; the big toes firmly seized with the hands [from behind the back / in the region of the heart], the chin lowered, the gaze on the tip of the nose — this is the padmāsana of the ascetics, the destruction of all diseases.

The second variant of padma: the feet soles-up on the thighs, the palms below them [between the thighs], the gaze on the tip of the nose, the tongue to the root of the teeth, the chin slightly raised, [the breath at the chest] slow. This is padmāsana, the destruction of all diseases, accessible on earth only to a few with sense.

Having folded the hands firmly, bind padmāsana, press the chin to the chest and [concentrate] the thought; again and again lift the downward air upward — [then] he, delving into the prāṇa, awakens the incomparable power. Who in padma inhales the air through the “nāḍī gates”, he is liberated, without doubt.

The ankles under the testicles, at the sides of the “sīvinī” channel, crosswise; the hands on the knees with straightened fingers, the mouth open, the gaze — on the tip of the nose: this is siṃhāsana, always revered by the yogins; the best of postures, it joins the triple lock [the mūla-, uḍḍīyana-, jālandhara-bandhas].

Then the ankles — under the testicles, at the sides of the “sīvinī” thread, and the feet at the sides to be bound firmly with the hands, motionless: this is bhadrāsana, the destruction of all diseases; the same the siddhī-yogins call the “posture of Gorakṣa”.

Thus, having built the habit of the bindings of the āsanas, the best of yogins passes to the cleansing of the channels, to the mudrās and to the work with the air. Success belongs to him who practises; and without practice — whence? Not the reading of books gives yogic success, not the garb and not talk about it — the cause of success is practice itself alone: this is the truth, doubt not. The postures, kumbhaka, the wondrous mudrās and movements [finally] are needed until the fruit of the royal yoga.

Notes

- In M00501 this is numbered as Haṭhapradīpikā 1.17 (“kathyaṃte kāni cinmayā”) with an added verse 18: «haṭhasya prathamāṃ gatvā dāsanaṃ pūrvamucyate» (“since āsana is the first [member] of haṭha, it is explained first”) — the standard Haṭhapradīpikā hints at the same; the Vārāhī skipped this line.
- The same line is in Mantrakaumudī 14 and the Kulamuktikallolinī (and in the KKM, in the ṣaṭkarman [section]). In M00501 (stanza 19) the reading is correct: «jānūrdhvoraṃtare… ṛjukāyaḥ samāsīta svastikaṃ tat pracakṣyate».
- In M00501 (stanza 20) the end of the line is «gomukhaṃ gomukhaṃ yathā» (“gomukha, like a cow’s [face]”); the sic-doubling “gomukhaṃ gomukhaṃ” is in both versions. The description rather recalls a cow-face posture with the ankles “by the sides of the back”, not the “gomūkha” (elbows-feet fanwise) of the later haṭha canon.
- This is an exact repetition of the vīra definition from the “Nāradīya” quotation of Mantrakaumudī 21 and Śāradātilaka 25.13–14 (and of the Gorakṣa quotation of the KKM: «itarasminnathorūṃ»); the most common formulas of the most “ritual” postures float through the whole late corpus.
- In M00501 (stanza 22) more correctly: «guḍaṃ nivadhya gulphābhyāṃ vyutkrameṇa samāhitaḥ» (“having pressed the perineum with the ankles crosswise”). “Vyutkrameṇa” — “in a changed/reverse [order]”, i.e. the ankles crosswise.
- “Vyomastha” is the same sic reading as in the kukkuṭa definition “of the other tantra” at KKM 30776; in M00501 (stanza 23) «padmāsanaṃ tu saṃyojya jānūrvoraṃtare karau». Here kukkuṭa is for the first time in the corpus described precisely as “padma + hands thrust through, body aloft” — and not as “squatting” (the ārdrIyā Mantramārga): two different postures with one name.

- In M00501 (stanza 24): «kukkuṭāsanavaṃdhastho dorbhyāṃ saṃvadhyakaṃdharaṃ | śeve kūrmavaduttānametaduttānakūrmakaṃ» — “sitting inside the cock, having bound the neck with both arms, lie face up, like a tortoise” — hence the sense (the printed Haṭhapradīpikā: «śete kūrmavad uttānam»; in both manuscripts «śeve/sate» — sic).
- In M00501 (stanza 25) the same, but «pāṇibhyāṃ… dhanurākarṣaṇaṃ kṛtvā dhanurāsanamīritaṃ». The words “lying face down” are absent in both manuscript versions — as in the printed Haṭhapradīpikā (it is “known” here from the general background).
- “Parivartita āgraḥ” stands for “parivartitāṅgaḥ” (M00501 stanza 26: «…pragṛhya tiṣṭhan parivartitāṃgaḥ») — “turned with the whole body”; the translation of the twist is given after the corrected sense. In M00501 stanza 27: «…jaṭharapracaṃpi pracaṃḍarunmaṃḍalakhaṃḍanāstraṃ» (“pressing the belly, the arrow crushing the circle of severe diseases”) — hence too the restoration of the second line.
- These two āsanas are omitted in the Vārāhī manuscript: after matsyendra śava comes there at once. In M00501 they occupy verses 28–31 (as in the printed Haṭhapradīpikā) — therefore they are included here as part of “the same block” in the form in which this manuscript milieu copied it. “Khemāyūra” = “khe [in the air] māyūram” — a sic word-splitting “khemāyūra metat”.
- In M00501 (stanza 32): «uttāna śavavadbhūmau śayanaṃ tu śavāsanaṃ | sarvāsana bhrāṃti haraṃ citta vibhrāṃti sādhanaṃ» (“removing the confusion of all [other contrivances for the sake of] āsanas, the remedy [for the mind]”).
- M00501 (stanzas 33–34): «…śreṣṭhaṃ tatrāpi ca sakhe tiṣṭha siddhāsane sadā» (“and the best [of them] — siddhāsana — hold to always”) and the order “bhadraṃ siṃhaṃ” reversed. The Vārāhī’s reading “two … padmāsana and siṃhāsana” is unique (found neither in the printed Haṭhapradīpikā nor in M00501) — a sic peculiarity of the tantra; I note it without correction.
- In the lines there are two lacunae marked by the scribe (*) — the restoration, after M00501 stanza 35: «yonidvārakamaṃghri mūlaghaṭitaṃ kṛtvā dṛḍhaṃ trinyase meḍhre pādamayaikameva hṛdaye dhṛtvāsanaṃ vigrahaṃ | sthāṇuḥ saṃyamitendriyo caladṛśāpaśyed bhruvoraṃtaraṃ caitanmokṣakapāṭabhedajanakaṃ siddhāsanaṃ procyate» (“pressing the heel to the yoni gates… setting the second foot… holding with the heart… steady, the senses curbed, with an unwavering gaze looking at the point between the brows”).
- This definition is identical to the “Nāradīya” vajra of Mantrakaumudī 22 («meḍhrādupari vinyasya savyaṃ gulphaṃ tathopari…») — that is, one and the same formula is called vajrāsana by one text and siddhāsana by another (and in the Vārāhī below they are given as synonyms!). In M00501 this is the “matāntare” (stanza 36).
- The Vārāhī reads “suktāsanaṃ” — apparently a corrupted “muktāsanaṃ”: in M00501 the same line is given doubly corrupted («anyevajñāsanaṃ … muktāprāṇaṃ», stanza 37), but the name “muktāsana” itself is attested in this manuscript milieu below — «muktāsane sthito yogī» (stanza 4.67 by the manuscript numbering, Muktabodha M00501, file line 982). The fourth synonym in the Vārāhī's line is "guptāsana".

- "Ātmadhyāyī" is a sic reading in both versions for "ātma-dhyāyī"; in M00501 stanza 39 ends «dvāsaptati sahasreṣu suṣumṇāmiva nāḍiṣu» ("like suṣumṇā among the channels") — in the Vārāhī itself (Muktabodha M00317, file line 12150) this pāda is transmitted as «dvisaptati sahasraiṣu nāḍīnāṃ mala śodhane» ("in the cleansing of the impurities of the 72 000 [channels]").
- The Vārāhī's transmission «prāṇānitye sāvadhāne varddha kevalakuṃbhake» and «urudyaṃte vinibhyāsā» is hopelessly sic; the sense — after M00501 (stanzas 41–42ab: «prāṇānile sāvadhānaṃ vaddhe kevala kuṃbhataḥ | utpadyate nirāyāsā svayamevonmanīyathā») — "if in kevala-kumbhaka [the air] is attentively held, without effort the unmanī [state] arises of itself".
- The standard sense of the formula (also visible from the manuscript readings): "there is no kumbhaka equal to the kevala [kumbhaka]" — in both manuscripts the line is distorted: the Vārāhī's «na kuṃbhasadṛśo nila», M00501 «na kuṃbhaḥ kevaloyamaḥ» — sic variants of one formula; the printed text (the reader has its edition) is not collated here, the readings are given verbatim.
- The text of the verse bears sic seams ("varaṇaṃ" for "caraṇaṃ"; "jānu bhūpari…" for "jānūrvor upari"). In M00501 (stanza 44): «…vāmaṃ tathāyāmyorūpari paścimena vidhinā dhṛtvā karābhyāṃ dṛḍhaṃ | aṃguṣṭho hṛdaye nidhāya civukaṃ nāsāgramālokayedetadvyādhināśakāriyamināṃ padmāsanaṃ procyate» — a little cleaner; the sic "paścimena vidhinā" ("in the final manner" = "finally", i.e. first the feet, then the hands) is in both versions. This is the padma with the toes grasped from behind the back — the one that at Mantrakaumudī 16–17 is called "not for japa".
- The line «uddhṛtya cibukaṃ vakṣye sthāpayet pacanaiśanaiḥ» is sic: in M00501 (stanza 46) «uttabhya civukaṃ vakṣasphacchāpya pavanaṃ śanaiḥ» — "having raised the chin, slowly filling the chest with air" — hence the sense ("slowly fill the chest with air"). In M00501 this variant is marked «matāntare tu». "The tongue to the base of the teeth" replaces the usual "to the palate".
- The line «vā svā * rasapārdamūrddhamanilaṃ prollāsa yat pūritaṃ muñcan» is hopelessly sic; in M00501 (stanza 48): «vāraṃvāramapānamūrddhamanilaṃ proccālayan pūrayan muṃcan prāṇāmupaiti vodhamatulaṃ śaktipramāvādataḥ» — "again and again lifting the downward air upward, filling and releasing, [the yogin] is filled with prāṇā" — the sense from here. In M00501 the verse is marked «paścāduktaṃ matsyendramaṃtaṃ» ("[this] is told after matsyendra"). The image of "drinking through the nāḍī gates" is not literal: the usual figure of [pra]napītyā, "to drink air" by a measured inhale ["mukta/mucyate" sic].
- "Sīvinī" — the same "thread" between the anus and the genitals as in the bhadrāsana of Mantrakaumudī/Merutantra/KKM. In M00501 (stanza 51): «vyātta vaktro nirīkṣena nāsāgaṃ susamāhitaḥ» ("with open mouth, with a gaze towards the nose, well concentrated"); in M00317 sic «nirīkṣeta māsāgre». "Dakṣiṇe

- The formula is the same as in the “other tantra” at the KKM (30785ff) and in the Merutantra gloss — with sic coincidences; here the Vārāhī literally coincides with the version which the KKM calls “after the other tantra”. In M00501 (stanzas 53–54) the same: «…gorakṣāsanamidaṃ vai prāhuste siddhayoginaḥ».
- In the second half-verse (≈ Haṭhapradīpikā 1.56) both manuscripts are sic with lacunae; the sense — “all this [exercises] until the fruit of the royal yoga”. Further chapter 26 of the Vārāhī continues with a paraphrase of the sections on mitāhāra (≈ Haṭhapradīpikā 1.57–63) and passes to prāṇāyāma: «athāsane dṛḍhe yogī vaśīti hamitāsanaḥ | gurūpadiṣṭamārgena yogamārga samabhyaset» (12252–12253; sic «vaśīti hamitāsanaḥ» — a conflation of «vaśī» and «hitamitāsanaḥ») and «calavātejalaṃvittaṃ niśca niścalate tathā | yogīsthāṇutva māpnoti…» (12255–12256; sic «vittaṃ» for «cittaṃ»). These subsequent places are no longer about postures; they are not translated here.

Word-by-word gloss

анена — with this [mantra]; праṇава-āдйена — beginning with the praṇava (the syllable oṃ); татра — there; куш́а-трайам — three [blades] of kuśa grass; кшипет — let him cast; āдхāра-ш́актим — [the name] Ādhāraśakti (“the support-power”); саṃпрочйа — having pronounced; ṅе-йутам — with the ending ṅe, that is, in the dative case; камала-āсанам — [the name] Kamalāsana (“lotus-seat”).

хр̣д-антам — ending in “heart” (the code name of the word namaḥ); манум — the mantra; уччāрйа — having pronounced; māйā-āдйена — [with the mantra] beginning with “māyā” (the code name of the bīja); прапӯджайет — let him worship; āсане — onto the seat; саṃвиш́ет — let him sit; паш́чāт — then; вӣра-āсанена — in the vīra (“hero”) posture; сāдхакаḥ — the sādhaka.

дакша-гулпхам — the right ankle; хи — indeed, precisely; вāма-ӯрау — onto the left thigh; тат-адхаḥ — under it; вāма-гулпхакам — the left ankle; курйāт — let him place; р̣джу-вапуḥ-грӣваḥ — with body and neck straight; ш́арӣрам — the body; р̣джуват — straight; чарет — let him hold (lit. “let him move, behave”).

сама-грӣвам — an even neck; видхāйа — having made; атха — thus, then; прокта̄м — is declared; вӣра-āсанам — vīrāsana; парам — the highest; кāмāкхйā-диш́-мукхаḥ — facing Kāmākhyā’s direction; сустхаḥ — steadily [seated]; прāк-мукхаḥ — facing east; вā — or; прапӯджайет — let him perform the pūjā.

сāмāнйа-аргхйасйа — of the general water offering (sāmānyārghya); тойена — with the water; прокшайет — let him sprinkle; йāга-бхӯмишу — the places of worship; ити — thus; те — to you; катхитаḥ — is told; хи — indeed; атра — here; āсана-видхиḥ — the rule of the seat (of the posture); пӯджане — at the pūjā.

Literal translation

2.75. With this [mantra] beginning with the praṇava, let him cast there three [blades] of kuśa; having pronounced “Ādhāraśakti” [and] “Kamalāsana” with a dative ending,

2.76. having pronounced the mantra ending in “heart”, let him worship [the seat with the mantra] beginning with “māyā”. Then let the sādhaka sit on the seat in vīrāsana.

2.77. The right ankle — onto the left thigh, under it — the left ankle let him place; with body and neck straight, let him hold the body straight.

2.78. Having made the neck even, — [so] is declared the highest vīrāsana. Facing Kāmākhyā’s direction, steadily [seated], or facing east, let him perform the pūjā.

2.79. With the water of the general offering let him sprinkle the places of worship. Thus is told to you here the seat rule at the pūjā.

Smooth translation

Having pronounced the mantra beginning with ॐ, the sādhaka lays three blades of kuśa on the seat and worships Ādhāraśakti and Kamalāsana: their names are pronounced in the dative case, with “namaḥ” at the end and with the bīja “māyā” at the beginning. Then he sits on this seat in vīrāsana: the right ankle lies on the left thigh, the left ankle — under it, the body and the neck straight. Such is the highest vīrāsana. Sitting steadily, facing Kāmākhyā’s direction or east, he performs the pūjā, and he sprinkles the places of worship with the water of the general offering. So is told the seat rule at the pūjā.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.
- Code names in the mantras: hṛd “heart” is the usual name of the word namaḥ in the tantras; māyā is the usual name of the bīja hrīṃ. These are generally accepted code designations, but in the stanza itself they are not explained.
- tadadho: “under it” — under the right ankle — or “under it”, that is, under the (right) thigh. The text does not specify. The posture described essentially coincides with the “half-lotus”; so the text itself calls it: “the highest vīrāsana”.
- śarīraṃ ṛjuvaccaret — the hiatus (śarīraṃ before a vowel) is so in the file. “Kāmākhyā” is the goddess of the Assam sanctuary; “facing Kāmākhyā’s direction” — so in the text.

Literal translation

Let him take a place in the same [manner], unafflicted; and the postures, beginning with svastika, O best one, I shall describe next: svastika, padmaka, vīra and vajra — the four are laudable for japa; [the end of 13 is corrupt].

Their definitions I shall describe in order, beginning with svastika. The feet placed properly between the knees and the thighs, O Umā, with a straight body sitting calmly — this is called svastika; onto the left thigh having placed the right foot, the knowing one, and the left one onto the right [thigh; sic the end of 15cd], holding with the hands the big toes, having placed the chin at the heart, looking at the tip of the nose, the wise one, — this is [praised as] padmāsana; [yet!] for japa and the like such a padmāsana was not prescribed by the wise.

Judging by the words “having made the palms into a cup” and the like: onto the left thigh let him place the right foot, and the left one the other way round; having settled only thus, he performs japa, the oblation and the rest; let it be known: this will be perfect [already] by the word [of the teacher]. For in the Nāradīya the sage expounded in the doctrine: with the ends of both feet onto the roots of both thighs having placed [them] upwards, let him sit — this is the padma posture; and one foot having placed on one thigh, and [the other one] on the other [thigh] — vīrāsana is declared; above the virile member having placed the left ankle, and above it the other ankle having placed — vajrāsana is declared.

Smooth translation

Let him sit in the same way, not tormenting himself; and the postures I shall now describe, O best one, beginning with svastika: svastika, padmaka, vīra and vajra — these four are laudable for japa.

Defining them in order: the feet are put between the knees and the thighs — with a straight body, calmly — this is svastika. The right foot on the left thigh, the left one on the right, the big toes in the hands, the chin at the chest, the gaze on the tip of the nose — this is [the so-called] padmāsana; but [mark:] for japa the wise have not named such a padmāsana.

Going by the words of other tantras (“let him make the palms into a cup”), for japa it is enough: the right foot on the left thigh, the left one — on the right, — and only so to perform japa, the oblation and so forth, and this will be perfect by the teacher’s word. And in the Nāradīya the sage taught: to sit, having raised the feet onto the roots of both thighs, — this is padma; one foot on one thigh, [the other higher? sic transmission] — vīrāsana; the left ankle above the perineum, on top of it the other one — vajrāsana.

Notes

- Verse 17 is a remarkable caveat: the full padma with the toes grasped and the chin at the chest is meant not for japa, but for yoga (cf. the same thought in the Mantramārga: Kiraṇa 58 lambiting “with the eyes closed”).
- The definition of vīrāsana here is incomplete / corrupt in transmission (cf. the complete one in Śāradātilaka 25.13–14 and the Gorakṣasaṃhitā quotation in Kulamuktikallolinī 11025–11028 — the block “Kulamuktikallolinī and ṣaṭkarman”). The definition of vajrāsana = the siddha posture (see Haṭhapradīpikā 1.35–43 in M00501) — here it looks different: “the left ankle above the perineum, on top — the other ankle”. In the same Mantrakaumudī further on (Muktabodha M00229, file line 5840) bhadra is defined otherwise: «gulphau ca vṛṣaṇasyādhaḥ… pārśvapādau ca pāṇibhyāṃ baddhaṃ bhadrāsanaṃ bhavet», and «kukkuṭā» — as the hands placed between the knees while squatting (Muktabodha M00229, file lines 5837–5838) — see by the context. The prohibition: «prasārya na japet pādāv utkaṭāsana eva vā» — “not to stretch out the legs; and [not to do japa] in utkaṭāsana” (Muktabodha M00229, file line 1919, pūraścaraṇa).

Verses with translation: Muṇḍamālātantra (1) 4.48–51: the “twelve seats”

In the sādhana for vāksiddhi (“[by japa] from day 14… at the root of a bilva”) twelve “seats” (āsana) are named. Postures and seat-objects are mingled here; the word “saṅketa” (“conventional, secret”) indicates that part of the names may be code language.

Literal translation

The seat of twelve kinds; the conventional posture — the highest: the auspicious throne, the lotus [seat], siddhāsana, siddha-siddha, [the seat] of the goddess, the cock posture, the highest vīrāsana, O beautiful one, and the boon-granting posture, the high lion throne, O goddess, the highest — the cremation-ground seat; the corpse-seat, O best of wives, rarest even for the gods: where the highest Brahman abides — the seat adorned with the highest.

Smooth translation

Twelve kinds of seats; and the best is the conventional posture: the auspicious throne, the lotus, siddha, siddha-siddha, [the throne] of the goddess, the cock, the supreme vīra, the “boon-granting” one, the high lion throne, above all — the cremation-ground seat, and the corpse-seat, rarest even for the gods, O best wife: on it abides the highest Brahman — the seat adorned with the highest.

Notes

- Mixed in the list are: postures (siddha, kukkuṭa, vīra), thrones (bhadrapīṭha, siṃhāsana — in the tantra these are also the seats of images), the place of the rite (śmaśāna), a seat made of a corpse (śavāsana — cf. the mahāsiddha rite of sitting on a corpse; the Sarvollāsa «śavābhāve viṣṭaraṃ hi vīrāsanam udīritam»). “Devānāmapi durlabham” — cf. “devairapi suduṣkaram” at Muṇḍamālā (2) below.

A parallel block of two texts (Muṇḍamālā (2) is the more grammatical, Hāhārāva repeats it almost verbatim with considerable distortions). Four “āsana” are enumerated — by the context these are both postures and fruit-bearing seats; above (verses 13–14) the seat itself, strewn with kuśa grass, hide and fabric, is described. Then in the Hāhārāva one more place with padmāsana occurs — at the dhyāna rite.

Literal translation

The auspicious posture destroys diseases; the “tortoise” posture (kaurma), giving yoga, — it they call padmāsana — gives the fruit of all power; one [more] — vīrāsana, O goddess, gives men all perfections. [With the legs up?] seated, O goddess, the retention, greatly adorned; [in meditation] with padmāsana, O mistress, the one entered into the house of the netherworld: for the best of all postures, hard to achieve even for the gods.

Food once a day, much chatter [to be avoided? sic], having made one’s evacuations, little sleep and food; achieving padmāsana [sic], let him contemplate the chosen deity, constantly thinking [of it] on the tip of the nose, contemplating [it] through the whole body up to the crown.

Smooth translation

Bhadra drives out diseases; kaurma — the yoga-giving one — is the padma itself, and gives every power; and vīra alone, O goddess, gives men all perfections. …[line 16c–d sic, not quite clear]. And he who [in the journey of consciousness] with padmāsana enters the dwelling of the netherworld: this is the best of all postures, hard even for the gods.

Food once a day, talk reduced to a minimum [sic], having relieved oneself, little sleep and food; having assumed padmāsana [sic], let him contemplate the chosen deity, always imagining it [starting] from the tip of the nose and through the whole body up to the crown.

Notes

- The formula “kaurma = padmāsana” recalls the “= this” transfer system in which kūrma/kambala may be the name of a seat (cf. “kambala” at Bṛhannīla 6.181, the Phetkāriṇī block); below I record the sic transmission. The Hāhārāva parallel (Muktabodha M00283, file lines 11161–11171) reads the same otherwise: «sadāsanaṃ bhogakaraṃ yogadaṃ kaurmamāsanam» (sic for bhadrāsanaṃ rogaharaṃ), «āsanaṃ siddhidaṃ nṛṇāṃ», «ūrdhva pāde sthito devīṃ viśeṣaparimaṇḍitaḥ» — and adds after the 17th: «rātrau yo vārcayeddevī dhanavān putravān bhavet».

- “Nāsāgre cintayet”, “śikhāparyantabhāvanā” — dhyāna from the tip of the nose to the crown; cf. the nāsāgra polemics of the Niśvāsakārikā and SKulārṇava. The transmission of M00283 is heavily distorted in the cases (sādhayāmi for sādhayan, cintayennityam without connection); the readings are preserved verbatim.

Isolated mentions of postures in the late Śākta and Kaula tantras, collected in one place (in the order of the catalogue, § 3.6). They are given with the shortest necessary context. The central place is the "yoni-mudrā" of the Parameśvarīmata, where svastikāsana is named directly.

Literal translation

He must not make japa with the legs stretched [forward], and avoiding utkaṭāsana; [and not] behind, in a wet stopping [?] or on the street near a low-lying place.

Both feet turned to each other are placed in svastikāsana; between them — the form of a yoni, let him not think on the spot (?)… This is the “foot-place-source”, to be known by the best of practitioners.

And the sādhaka, having become pure, having put on a new garment, having sat on the auspicious seat, having placed the mantra [or the deity] in front, makes the vow thus.

Facing east or north [the guru], having assumed padmāsana [sic “vadhvā”], makes the placement on the hands and the like, again [performs] the argha offering.

Then the rule of the japa ablution the meditating yogin shall perform; and padmāsana is to be made with the “cup-handful” mudrā; first let him fill with the inhale — Brahmā is the presiding deity there.

There the guru, abiding in siddhāsana: with the left heel having squeezed [the place] between the anus and the virile member, and on top [of it] so that the tips of the right foot’s toes rub against each other, with the right heel having squeezed the root of the member, with a steady body having sat.

And let him sit on the altar seat facing east, in bound padmāsana, silent, with a straight body, the senses conquered; and the best of teachers, having laid out the pūjā requisites.

Having strewn the pīṭha layer at that [place], then in bound vīrāsana, with the worship of the hero, O mistress, let him scatter the clods to the quarters of the sky.

The many nigamas and āgamas, giving enjoyments and liberation; in [them] for the goddesses as for the gods many nyāsas are named, bearing the marks of creation and preservation; and bound padma and so on are said uncountably — [and also] the paśu, vīra, divya states, the deities giving the siddhi of mantras.

The first is named siddhāsana, the second — kamalāsana; on tiger hide — all siddhis, on deer hide — the siddhi of knowledge; the fabric seat destroys diseases, of cane — increases love, of silk — is named as giving growth, of wool — gives all siddhis.

Smooth translation

Let him not make japa either with stretched-out legs or in utkaṭāsana [sitting in a squat]; [and also] afterwards, in a wet place, or on the road, or near a low-lying place.

The feet are turned to each other, as in svastikāsana; between them the image [of the yoni] is contemplated — this is the “fourth yoni-mudrā”; the sādhaka must know it.

The sādhaka, having cleansed himself and put on new clothes, sits on the auspicious seat, places the mantra in front — and makes the vow….

The guru, having turned east or north, assumes padmāsana — and, having performed the nyāsa on the hands, proceeds.

Then, doing the rule of the japa ablution, the comprehending yogin assumes padmāsana with the “cup-handful” mudrā and first fills himself with the inhale — Brahmā is the presiding deity here.

Here the guru in siddhāsana: the left heel presses the place between the anus and the virile member, the right foot on top of it, so that the toes of the right foot rub against each other, the right heel presses the root of the member; having sat with a steady body.

And let the director-deśika sit on the altar facing east, in bound padmāsana, silent, with a straight body, having conquered the senses, and let him lay out the pūjā requisites.

Having spread the underlay, then, in bound vīrāsana, with the worship of the hero, let him scatter the clods to the quarters.

In the endless nigamas and āgamas, where many nyāsas are expounded, countless [postures] beginning with the bound padma are mentioned too, and the paśu-vīra-divya states, and the deities giving the siddhi of mantras. The commentator specifies: by “and so on” the “unbound (mukta) padma” is meant too.

[Of the postures] the first — siddha, the second — the lotus one; [the seats:] on tiger hide — all siddhis, on deer hide — those of knowledge; fabric — against diseases, cane — love, silk — growth, wool — all siddhis.

Notes

- Compare the prohibitions at Kulārṇava 12.86 (its block) and Mantrakaumudī 1919 (its block): “not to stretch out the legs” recurs as a single ritual norm of different traditions.
- The half-verse “tayormadhye… ciṃtayet” is incomplete in the e-text (“cāsane” sic); I do not restore it; the sense conveyed here is limited to the first half-verse — a sure parallel to ŚT 25.19 (svastika between the feet). This is one of the rarest cases where the word svastikāsana is used inside a Kaula context.
- “Bhadrāsana” here is rather a “bhadra” rug-seat (by material) than the described posture; cf. the same word in the “twelve seats” of the Muṇḍamālā (its block). The vow is given below in chapter 11 (the deliverance from the pregnancy-mishap).
- “Vadhvā” is sic for baddhvā; the reading is corrupt, preserved verbatim.
- This is a “baddhvā padmāsanaṃ”-like formula: posture + mudrā + prāṇāyāma as a single set. Not to be confused with the early Brahmayāmala (Picumata) — the source of this very line is IFP T00522.
- This is the commentary, not the text itself; it gives the most precise anatomical description of siddhāsana in the late corpus (the left heel at the perineum, the right one on top — as in Haṭhapradīpikā 1.35–43 and the KKM quotation).
- The commentator («baddhapadmetyādi… muktapadmāsanādeḥ saṃgrahaḥ», Muktabodha M00049, file lines 460–461) — the rarest evidence that a late commentator is aware of the difference between the “bound” and the “open” padma.

- The same pair (āsana postures + seat materials) occurs also in another place of the KKM (30792): «sarvasiddhau dvīpicarma jñānasiddhyai mṛgājinaṃ».
- Kulamuktikallolinī (Muktabodha M00318, file lines 11025–11036, 30761–30789) — quotes the “Gorakṣasaṃhitā” on vīrāsana and the ṣaṭkarman ritual postures (padma, svastika, vikaṭa, kukkuṭa, vajra, bhadra).

Verses with translation: Kulamuktikallolinī: vīrāsana after the “Gorakṣasaṃhitā” and the six ṣaṭkarman postures (quotations from other tantras)

The KKM anthology borrows large chunks: first for the “hero’s” repast rite the vīrāsana is given after the “Gorakṣasaṃhitā”, beside it a formula from the Merutantra is given (“seated in svastikāsana or in padma, facing north, the mind concentrated” — marked by the editor as “another [reading]: vīrabhinnapara”), and in the chapter on the ṣaṭkarman — the six postures with definitions “from another tantra” (“lakṣaṇamuktaṃ tantrāntare”). These definitions almost literally coincide with Mantrakaumudī 14–22 and Śāradātilaka 23.131/25, hence my marking of the sic cases.

Literal translation

Let him sit in vīrāsana, having first worshipped the seat itself; having sat there by the rule and eaten the [ritual] substance, [he becomes] the cause [of success]. The definition of vīrāsana — in the Gorakṣasaṃhitā: “having placed one foot on one thigh, and on the other [thigh — the other one], — this they called vīrāsana”. In the Merutantra: “facing north or east, abiding in svastikāsana, or having entered padmāsana, with a straight body [sic ṛjukoyo], with a concentrated mind”.

“Padma, svastika, and also vikaṭa and kukkuṭa, vajra and bhadraka — [such are] the postures [sic]”. The definition — in another tantra: padma — having placed the right foot on the left thigh, and the left one on the right [thigh] in the final manner [sic], firmly holding with both hands the big toes [of the feet], having placed [them] at the heart and the chin [at the chest], looking at the tip of the nose; svastika — both feet properly between the knees and the thighs, with a straight body, sitting calmly; vikaṭa — one foot on one thigh, the other one — on the other; kukkuṭa — having joined padmāsana, both hands above the knees-thighs, set on the ground, hanging in the void [sic]; vajra — above the virile member having placed the left ankle, on top — the other ankle; bhadra — the ankles under the testicles at the sides of the “sīvinī thread”, both sideward feet with both hands firmly bound, motionless — this is bhadrāsana, the destruction of all diseases.

Smooth translation

In vīrāsana let him sit, having first worshipped the seat; having sat there by the rule and eaten the [ritual] preparation, he becomes the author [of success]. As defined in the Gorakṣasaṃhitā: one foot on one thigh, the other one — on the other: it is called vīrāsana. And in the Merutantra: facing north or east, in svastikāsana or in padma, with a straight body, with a concentrated mind.

For the six magical acts the wise named six postures: padma, svastika, vikaṭa, kukkuṭa, vajra and bhadraka. From “another tantra” the definitions are also given: padma — the feet crosswise on the thighs, the big toes in the hands, firmly, the gaze on the tip of the nose; svastika — both feet between the knees and the thighs, the body straight; vikaṭa — one foot on one thigh, the other one [below]; kukkuṭa — by padma, the hands above the knees, the body lifted off the ground [sic]; vajra — the left ankle above the perineum, on top of it the other one; bhadra — the ankles under the testicles, both sideward feet firmly bound with the hands — it destroys all diseases.

Notes

- The “Gorakṣasaṃhitā” definition (11027–11028) is almost verbatim the same as in Śāradātilaka 25.13–14 and in the Kriyākramadyotikā → Suprabheda commentary (another pair). The Merutantra quotation is given without a number, but the same formula stands in M00195 (ch. 34, at śānti). The editor adds: «idamapi vīrabhinnaparaṃ vodhyaṃ» — “and understand this too as differing from vīrāsana, in another way”.
- The padma definition here coincides with Mantrakaumudī 15–16 (sic «civukaṃ» ≈ «cibukaṃ», «lakṣaṇamuktam tantrāntare»); the kukkuṭa (sic «vyomastha») transmission is corrupt; vajrāsana = the Nāradīya variant from Mantrakaumudī 22 — and not the siddhāsana of the Haṭhapradīpikā. Bhadrāsana = the same as at Mantrakaumudī 5840 (sic coincidences «sīvanyāḥ pārśvayoḥ», «dhṛḍhamvadhvā/baddhaṃ»).

Translation of the descriptions: * svastika: the big toes pressed in the gap between the knees, the middle of the body, the neck and the gaze straight. * padma: both forefeet on the roots of the thighs. * bhadra: the other way round. * yogāsana: the right foot on the [left] thigh, the left foot under the right thigh. * gomukha: the scrotum pressed, one sits with the buttock and thigh on the left shin, foot and ankle, the right knee on top. * ardhasvastika: the right foot tucked in, on a board; the left foot on the ground, the shin vertical. * vīrāsana: both feet on the ground, the shins crossed, the hands on the knees "like an arch", bound with a yogapaṭṭa. * kukkuṭa = utpuṭika: to squat directly on the feet, without a board, the thighs and shins "like an arch". * ardhakukkuṭa = pārṣṇi (for māraṇa).

Designation of use (72–77): kamala (padma) — for the conquest of the winds and the senses, deliverance, dhāraṇā, samādhi; bhadra — for the constant rites and the rites of prosperity (nityapauṣṭikādau); svastika — for appeasement and abhiṣeka; yogāsana — for sakalīkaraṇa, samādhi, haṃsa-yoga; vīrāsana — for stopping armies, subjugation and so on; kukkuṭa — for enmity and expulsion; gomukha — for the conquest of the winds. The conclusion (78): "vijayena yathaivam āsanānāṃ phalam ekāgratayā manaḥprasādaḥ" — "the fruit of mastering the postures is concentration and clarity of mind".

Verses with translation: Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati, vol. 1, chapter 5 (sādhanapaṭala), 62–78: the seats, the eleven postures and their designation of use

The Muktabodha file M00016 is the first volume of the edition: Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati, ed. T. Gaṇapati Śāstrī, Trivandrum, 1921 (the file header mentions the reprint: Bharatiya Vidya Prakashan, Delhi). Chapter 5 of the Tantrasāra part is the “chapter on practice” (sādhanapaṭala, colophon on line 1716). Before this passage the auspicious days and constellations for the rites are treated (5.59–60), and the statement that the fruit of japa and homa is not obtained by one who performs them in a cart, impure, or with the mind attached to the sensual (5.61). After the postures (5.79 onwards) come the maṇḍalas of the elements for the six magical rites. The verses are in a long metre, two lines to the verse.

Literal translation

5.62. The seat here should be neither too low nor high, nor covered with an impure hide or blanket, nor [made] of an inauspicious tree, nor split or scorched, nor fouled by people, water, leavings or dirt.

5.63. Auspicious are the underlays of kuśa and darbha grass, broad boards of sacred trees, the russet-tinted (?) hide of the hyena and the deer [hide]; [seats] of good metal and ivory are also commended.

5.64. Broad seats, evenly covered with white, clean, washed fabric, serve the success of the pacific rites; [seats] of poisonous trees and the like — for the unpacific work.

5.65. Having sat on the underlay and then pressed the big toes in the gap between the knees, with the middle of the body, the neck, the gaze and the upper body straight (?) — the svastika posture is attained.

5.66. Having placed both forefeet above at the root of both thighs and sat as before — “padma” is said; the other way round — bhadra.

5.67. Having placed the right foot on the thigh and then the right thigh on the left foot, if he sits well as before — this they call yogāsana, which gives the desired.

5.68. Having pressed both testicles, sitting with the buttock and thigh on the left shin, foot and ankle, with the right thigh and knee on top — such a yogin abides in the gomukha posture.

5.69. With the right foot tucked in, having sat on a board and the like, with the left foot set on the ground and the shin raised up — this they call ardhasvastika.

5.70. Likewise having sat on the seat, both feet set on the ground, the shins bound together, the hands on the knees even as an arch — if he is bound with a yogapaṭṭa, [this is] vīrāsana.

5.71. If he sits placed on both feet on the ground, without a board and the like, with the thighs and shins arranged even as an arch — this here is utpuṭikā, alias kukkuṭa.

5.72. For the conquest of the winds and of the senses, for deliverance from being, for good dhāraṇā and for samādhi the lotus posture is desirable here; bhadra is named useful for the constant rites, the rites of prosperity and so on.

5.73. For all the rites of appeasement svastika is named, and also for the abhiṣeka; for the appeasing japa, homa and pūjā ardhasvastika is desirable as well.

5.74. For sakalīkaraṇa, for [the rites of] one’s own unity with the deity (?), for the japas, for samādhi and haṃsa-yoga, for the discernment of the highest truth, yogāsana is desirable, if the guru is in front (?).

5.75. For victory over an army and for stopping it, for immobilization, the taming of spirits and so on, also for love-spells or for attraction, vīrāsana is named — for quick success.

5.76. Kukkuṭa is named for [casting upon] the enemies enmity, expulsion and stupefaction; and for the rites of destruction — the posture known as “pārṣṇi”, or ardhakukkuṭa.

5.77. For the conquest of the winds, for the appeasement of one’s own faults and for the rite of stopping an army — gomukha; for the attraction of women — the lotus; [or that posture] which is mastered, known and taught by the guru (?).

5.78. Thus from the conquest of the postures the fruit is clarity of mind through concentration. For the mind is the cause of all; if it is under one’s own power, what is not conquered? — everything.

Smooth translation

The seat should be neither too low nor too high, nor covered with an impure hide or a blanket. It is not made of ill-omened wood, and it must not be split, scorched or soiled. Good are the underlays of the sacred kuśa and darbha grasses, broad boards of sacred trees, hyena hide, deer hide, and seats of good metal and ivory. For the pacific rites the seat is covered with clean white fabric, while for the fierce ones it is made of poisonous trees.

Svastika: having sat on the underlay, one presses the big toes in the gap between the knees and keeps the body, neck and gaze straight. Padma: the forefeet are placed above at the root of the thighs; bhadra — the same the other way round. Yogāsana, which gives the desired: the right foot is placed on the thigh, and the right thigh on the left foot. Gomukha: pressing the testicles, one sits with the buttock and thigh on the left shin, foot and ankle, while the right thigh and knee lie on top. Ardhasvastika: one sits on a board with the right foot tucked in, and sets the left foot on the ground, shin upward. Vīrāsana: one sits on the seat, the feet on the ground, the shins bound together with the yogic band, the hands resting on the knees even as an arch. Kukkuṭa, alias utpuṭikā: one squats with the feet on the ground, without a board; the thighs and shins form an even arch.

The designation of the postures is as follows. The lotus posture is for conquering breath and the senses, for deliverance, dhāraṇā and samādhi. Bhadra suits the constant rites and the rites of prosperity. Svastika — the rites of appeasement and the initiatory sprinkling; ardhasvastika — the appeasing japa, homa and pūjā. Yogāsana — the placing of mantras on the body, japa, samādhi, haṃsa-yoga and the discernment of the highest truth. Vīrāsana gives quick success in stopping an army, immobilization, the taming of spirits, love-spells and attraction. Kukkuṭa is for casting enmity, expulsion and stupefaction upon the enemies, and for destruction — the “heel” posture, alias ardhakukkuṭa. Gomukha is for conquering the breath, appeasing one’s own faults and stopping an army. The lotus is for attracting women. One may also choose the posture one has mastered and which the guru has taught. Mastery of the postures gives concentration and clarity of mind; and the mind is the cause of all: who has subdued it, has conquered all.

Notes

- Translation — mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.
- In 5.72 the lotus posture is prescribed for the conquest of the winds, deliverance, dhāraṇā and samādhi, and bhadra — for the constant rites and the rites of prosperity. In the main body of Part IV the designations of these two postures had been merged; there this is corrected.
- In 5.66 “as before” (pureva) refers, apparently, to 5.65: to sit straight. “The other way round” for bhadra is not explained; it may mean the reversed position of the feet (heels forward instead of toes), but this is only a guess.
- The “+” sign in 5.64 is in the file itself and marks, probably, a lacuna in the edition.
- agrato guruś cet (5.74) can also be understood as “if [he himself is] the guru, [sitting] in front”. The end of 5.77 (vijitaṃ yad viditaṃ gurūpadiṣṭam) is likewise ambiguous.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

The Muktabodha file M00233 is the last volume of the same edition (ed. T. Gaṇapati Śāstrī, Trivandrum; the file description says “Volume 3 of 4 … 1922”, the title page says “Volume 4”; as given in the file). Chapter 2 of the Yogapāda of the Uparibhāga part has the colophon: yogapāde yogalakṣaṇādipaṭalo dvitīyaḥ — “in the Yogapāda the second chapter, on the characteristics of yoga and so on” (lines 14169–14170). Before this passage the ten yamas and the ten niyamas are listed (2.33–35), and after the postures (under the rubric āsanāni) the next limb of yoga follows. In the file the lines are not broken by hemistichs, so a verse may begin in the middle of a line. Verses 37–40 are the same definitions as in volume 1, 5.65–68 (see the block above), with a few variant readings.

before; сӯпавишṭаḫ — sitting well; йади — if; йога-āсанам — yogāsana; ишṭадам — giving the desired; тат āхуḫ — this they call.

(2.40) вр̣шаṇе — both testicles; ту — then; нигр̣хйа — having pressed; вāма-джанґхā-пада-гулпхе — on the left shin, foot and ankle; ту — next; адхирӯдха-са-спхиг-урӯḫ [= -ӯруḫ] — sitting with the buttock and thigh; упари-стхита-дакшиṇа-ӯру-джāнуḫ — with the right thigh and knee on top; кхалу — indeed; йогī саḫ ту — that yogin; гомукха-āсана-стхаḫ — abiding in the gomukha posture.

Literal translation

2.35. “…the hearing of the doctrine, modesty, reflection (?), the repetition of the mantra, the fire-offering — these are the niyamas”. [Rubric:] niyamas. The postures as well are expounded in many ways in the first part of the paddhati.

2.36–37ab. Of them only five are commended as giving success in yoga: svastika, the one called padma, bhadra, yogāsana, and also gomukha. Their definition is expounded one by one.

2.37cd. Having sat on the underlay and then pressed the big toes in the gap between the knees, with the middle of the body, the neck… and the upper body straight — the svastika posture is attained.

2.38. Having thus placed both forefeet above at the root of both thighs and sat as before — “padma” is said; the other way round — bhadra.

2.39. Having placed the right foot on the thigh and then the left foot on the right thigh, if he sits well as before — this they call yogāsana, which gives the desired.

2.40. Having pressed both testicles, sitting with the buttock and thigh on the left shin, foot and ankle, with the right thigh and knee on top — such a yogin abides in the gomukha posture.

Smooth translation

The postures are described in detail in the first part of this paddhati. For success in yoga only five are commended: svastika, padma, bhadra, yogāsana and gomukha. Svastika: having sat on the underlay, one presses the big toes in the gap between the knees and keeps the body and neck straight. Padma: the forefeet are placed above at the root of the thighs; bhadra — the same the other way round. Yogāsana, which gives the desired: the right foot is placed on the thigh, and the left foot on the right thigh. Gomukha: pressing the testicles, one sits with the buttock and thigh on the left shin, foot and ankle, while the right thigh and knee lie on top.

Notes

- Translation — mine (AI), made from the e-text; not cross-checked against published translations.

- “The first part of the paddhati” (pūrvapaddhati) is, apparently, that Tantrasāra in which the postures are given in chapter 5, 62–78 (see the block above). This identification is mine; the text gives no name.
- The chief variant reading is in the definition of yogāsana. Volume 1 (5.67) has savye caraṇe tu dakṣiṇorum — “the right thigh on the left foot”, whereas here (2.39) savyaṃ caraṇaṃ tu dakṣiṇorau — “the left foot on the right thigh”. By the second reading the posture looks like a seat with both feet on the thighs. Judging by these two files alone, it cannot be decided which reading is original.
- Other variant readings: galakṣaṇa instead of galekṣaṇa (2.37; the second reading of volume 1 yields the sense “the neck, the gaze”), tathopariṣṭād instead of tv athopariṣṭād (2.38), sasphigurūḥ instead of sasphigūruḥ (2.40). The “?” sign after matiśca in 2.35 is in the file itself.
- Verse 2.35 begins with the tail of a quotation on the niyamas (… ete tu niyamāḥ | iti), followed in the file by the rubric || niyamāḥ ||.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

In the paddhatis the postures are named as the setting of the obligatory rites (the meal, ācamana, nyāsa). For “baddhavīrāsana” the Kriyākramadyotikā gives a definition from the Suprabheda; the Somaśambhupaddhati-vyākhyā — from the Kiraṇa (see its own block in § 1.10 and the manuscripts in § 13); and the two definitions are different! — here too a separate prohibition of “autkuṭya” (“the squat”) is given. In the Śivārcanacandrikā (prose) — sitting in kukkuṭāsana at the placing of the mantras upon the hands and sitting in svastikāsana at the preparation of the argha.

(the prohibition of the squat) мӯрдха пидхāнам мастакасйа пидхāнам āччхāданам — "the covering of the head" = the covering of the crown, the screening; ауткуṭйам уткуṭӣ бхāвам — "autkuṭya" = the state of squatting (utkuṭī); уткуṭи снāнам картавйам ити — that is, one is [not] to bathe squatting.

(Śivārcanacandrikā (the ācamana nyāsa)) прāк мукхаҳ удак мукхаҳ вā — facing east or north; куккуṭāсана стхаҳ — abiding in kukkuṭāsana; пāṇи двайам джāнунӣ антарā нидхāйа — having placed both hands between the knees; хāм хр̣дайāйа намаҳ — "hāṃ", homage to the heart [and so on].

Literal translation

[When the ghee has been poured into the bowl, one eats with those of equal caste] with the hand between the knees, or in the bound vīrāsana; talk unbecoming at the meal let him avoid; with the left hand at the bowl let him eat.

[The commentary on the list of prohibitions at the meal:] this shows that the rules of eating are to be understood from the very definition onward. “The covering of the head” — the screening of the crown. “Autkuṭya” — the state of squatting (utkuṭībhāva); [it is forbidden] to take one’s ablution squatting.

Facing east or north, abiding in kukkuṭāsana, having placed both hands between the knees, [he performs the nyāsa] on both hands, on the fingers, beginning with the little finger: “hāṃ”, homage to the heart ….

…or having turned to the north, having assumed the pleasant [or: the used-to-be-practised] svastika posture.

Smooth translation

[At the meal]: the hand between the knees, or [sitting] in the bound vīrāsana, unbecoming talk is avoided; with the left hand at the bowl let him eat.

What “in the bound vīrāsana” means is defined in the glorious Suprabheda thus: “the left foot [the line is sic] above the right — placed so it is called vīrāsana, especially at the time of eating”.

[The prohibitions at the meal/ablution:] do not cover the head; “autkuṭya” — the posture “on one’s haunches” — that is, one must not wash oneself squatting.

Turned to the east or to the north, sitting in kukkuṭāsana, put both hands between the knees — and on the fingers of both hands [make the nyāsa]: “hāṃ”, homage to the heart ….

Thereafter, turned to the north, or having assumed again the svastika posture one practises.

Notes

- The transmission “dvirbhujāpatītaṃ” is sic; presumably something like “dvibhujāṃ antikāv itaṃ?” — I do not restore it. The same passage of the Somaśambhupaddhati-vyākhyā quotes the Kiraṇa (not the Suprabheda): “vīrākhyaṃ tac chṛṇuṣv etat | dakṣiṇañcordhvatasthitvā vāmapādatalasthitam” (“hear the one called “vīra”: standing with the right [leg] above, [the left] placed on the sole [of the right]”, Muktabodha M00220, file lines 2084–2085), — remarkable, since Kiraṇa 58 in the manuscripts gives the vīra with the reversed position of the legs (see its block in § 13). The discrepancy “left upon right / right upon left” between the traditions is regular (cf. Śāradātilaka 25, the Gorakṣa quotation of the KKM).

- “Autkuṭya/utkuṭībhāva” is a rare commentatorial term directly defining the posture “on one’s haunches”; cf. the prohibitions of Parameśvarīmata 7107 (utkaṭāsana), Mantrakaumudī 1919, and the same-named postures utkuṭikāsana/utkaṭāsana in the iconography (Aṃśumat, Kāmika U).
- This is the ācamana prescription: the folding of the palms between the knees — apparently, sitting on one’s haunches (cf. the definition of kukkuṭa at Mantrakaumudī 5837–5838: “kṛtvotkaṭāsanaṃ pūrvaṃ… antarjānukaradvandvaṃ”) — the liveliest parallel, from the ritual text itself.
- The line “ruciraṃ svastikaṃ vā’bhyastamāsanamāsthāya” is distorted by a copyist (“ruciraṃ” looks like a stray product of a sandhi “sarvam-āvocan?” — the sense is doubtful, the rendering literal).
- Tantrāloka (all lines below — file M00093, chs. 15–38).
    - 32.10 = Mālinīvijayottaratantra 7.15 (Tantrāloka chapters 15 thru 38: Muktabodha e-text no. Verses with translation: Piṅgalāmata (M00305): the postures in the iconometry — how the deities sit, from Gaṇeśa to the Buddha mount]; джавā кусума саṃкāш́аḥ бхуджаиḥ двāдаш́а маṇḍитаḥ — resembling the hibiscus flower, adorned with twelve arms.

The Piṅgalāmata is an early Bhairava-āgama of the iconometric profile (in the e-library it goes side by side with the Brahmayāmala corpus; the copy underlying the e-text is dated saṃvat 297 = AD 1177, colophon on lines 12556–12560). The pratimā-/prāsādalakṣaṇa sections enumerate the images of gods with precise postures: gathered here are all the places where padmāsana, vīrāsana, yogāsana, siṃhāsana, mayūrāsana, the Buddhist padmāsana and the ritual thrones (bhadrapīṭha, catuṣkikāsana, siṃhāsana) are named. The value of the corpus: the āsanas of the living tradition (yoga) and the āsanas of a deity are one and the same vocabulary; the Piṅgalāmata shows how the carver/icon-painter operates with it.

(Sadāśiva (1854–58)) чатургаджāпарисаṃха чатусаṃкхйа āсана упари — on the “four-membered seat”, towering like four elephants [“catusaṃkhyāsana” — a four-part throne]; чатуḥпāдам каджāрддхам ту карṇикā упари саṃстхитам — [the image] four-legged, with half a lotus [?], established above the pericarp [sic]; чатурвактрам ча ашṭабхуджам чандрāрддха кṛта ш́екхарам — the four-faced and eight-armed one, crowned with the half-moon; тринетрам дхйāна сасампанна падмāсана сусаṃстхитам — the three-eyed one, full of contemplation, well established in padmāsana.

(Durgā-Ambikā (1926, 1931–32)) симхāсана упари кāрйā падме вā ḍабхра саṃстхитā — she is to be fashioned on a lion-throne or established on a small (short) lotus [“ḍabhra” = “dabhra”, sic spelling]; двибхуджāм ча тринетрāм ча вактра ека чандрамас прабхāм — two-armed, three-eyed, with a face shining like the single moon; падмāсанāм ча татрастхāм хаста уттāна тапасвинӣм — and one abiding there in padmāsana, an ascetic with raised arms [there follows “pañcāgni-saṃyuktā” — joined with the five fires].

(The rudras and Nīlakaṇṭha (1982–85)) вӣрāсана стхитāḥ сарве йогāсанāḥ атха апи вā — let all [108 rudras] stand in vīrāsana or in yogāsana; падмāсанаḥ бхавет девaḥ нӣлакаṇṭхаḥ трилочанаḥ — but the god Nīlakaṇṭha — the three-eyed one — [is] in padmāsana; карау двау кāрет тасйа вйāкхйāна удйата лӣна дрк — his two hands [let one make] raised in [the gesture of] instruction, the gaze — downcast.

(Yogīndra (2092)) йогāсанам ча йогӣндрам йогāбхйāса ратаḥ судхӣḥ — and [let him depict] the best of yogins, the wise one, delighting in the practice of yoga, [seated] on a yogāsana.

(The Bhagavān-teacher (2101–02)) падмāсанастхаḥ бхагавāн вйāкхйāна удйата пāṇинаḥ — the Blessed One sits in padmāsana, [his] hand raised in [the gesture of] instruction; ш́ӯла акшасӯтра саṃйуктаḥ тринетраḥ саумйа вактракаḥ — joined with the trident and the rosary, three-eyed, of a gentle face.

(Śiva-śānta (2134)) ш́āнта падмāсана āсӣнаḥ йогайук джн̃āна рӯпакаḥ — sitting in the “padmāsana of peace”, united with yoga, the embodiment of knowledge.

(The Buddha (2367–68)) буддхаḥ падмāсанаḥ кāрйаḥ хаста уттāна самāдхинā — the Buddha is to be fashioned in padmāsana, [with] a raised hand in samādhi [the context is the daśāvatāra; “hastottāna” — cf. “hastottāna tapasvinī” of Ambikā]; праламба ш́раваṇаḥ саумйаḥ какшāвāсаḥ ту чӣвараḥ — with pendent earlobes, the gentle one, in monastic garb covering the armpit [“kakṣāvāsa” — the upper covering down to the armpits].

lion-throne or one made by a twice-born [sic “śiviṃ”], of gold; раупйаджам тāмраджам вā атха лохаджам дāруджам апи — of silver, of copper, of iron or of wood; четраджам чармаджам вā атха вастраджам вā паṭам вр̣там — of painted cloth [“cetra” sic for “citra”?], of hide, or wrapped in fabric/canvas.

(The four-membered throne (10997–11000)) найет чатушкикā āсанам бхадра пӣṭхам ту саṃстхитам — let him conduct [the image] to the four-membered seat, established on a bhadrapīṭha; чатушкӣ мадхйа саṃсāдхйа ш́илā стхāпанам āрабхет — having set [the image] in the middle of the four [legs of the throne], he begins the installation of the stone [stele/image].

Literal translation

[Gaṇeśa] is to be depicted sitting there in padmāsana or in vīrāsana, or standing on [his] mouse, or [seated] under the lotus. — [Naṭeśvara] is to be fashioned three-eyed, united with yoga, well furnished with a yogāsana. — [Kārttikeya] on the peacock, six-faced, resembling the hibiscus flower, with twelve arms. — [Sadāśiva] on the four-membered throne, four-faced, eight-armed, with the half-moon on the brow, three-eyed, full of contemplation, firmly established in padmāsana. — [Durgā-Ambikā] is made on a lion-throne or on a small lotus; another one — two-armed, three-eyed, with a moon-like face — in padmāsana, an ascetic with raised arms [between the five fires]. — All [the rudras] stand in vīrāsana or yogāsana; Nīlakaṇṭha — in padmāsana, with two hands raised in instruction, with downcast gaze. — And the best of yogins, delighting in the practice of yoga, on a yogāsana. — The Blessed One in padmāsana, with a hand raised in instruction, with the trident and the rosary. — Sitting in the padmāsana of peace, united with yoga, the embodiment of knowledge. — The Buddha — in padmāsana, with a raised hand in samādhi, with long ears, in monastic garb. — At the installation arrange a seat inside the pīṭha: a lion-throne of gold, silver, copper, iron, wood, painted cloth, hide or wrapped in fabric. — Conduct [the image] to the four-membered seat established on the bhadrapīṭha; set [it] in the middle of the four [legs] and begin the installation of the stone.

Smooth translation

Gaṇeśa sits in padmāsana or vīrāsana, or stands on his mouse, or is enthroned on the lotus. The dancing Naṭeśvara is to be fashioned three-eyed, united with yoga and generically belonging to the yogāsana. Kārttikeya — a six-faced youth, hibiscus-coloured, with twelve arms — is enthroned on the peacock. Sadāśiva, four-faced and eight-armed, crowned with the half-moon, sunk in contemplation, is firmly established in padmāsana on the “four-membered throne”. Durgā-Ambikā is set on a lion-throne or on a small lotus; another image of her — a two-armed, three-eyed, moon-faced ascetic with raised arms between the five fires — is in padmāsana. The hundred rudras stand in vīrāsana or yogāsana; Nīlakaṇṭha is the exception: he is in padmāsana, with two hands raised in instruction and a downcast gaze. In the image of the yogin-preceptor — the yogīndra — the same language of the posture: he sits on a yogāsana, delighting in the practice of yoga. The Blessed-teacher (the Dakṣiṇāmūrti type) — in padmāsana, the hand in the gesture of instruction, with a trident and a rosary about him. Śiva as the embodiment of knowledge sits in the “padmāsana of peace”. The Buddha — in padmāsana, with a raised hand in samādhi, with long ears, in monastic attire. At the installation ritual the image is seated: a lion-throne — of gold, silver, copper, iron, wood, painted cloth or hide, wrapped in fabric; or on a “four-membered seat” set upon a bhadrapīṭha — and the stone is installed in the middle of its four legs.

Notes

- The manuscript dating in the colophon: “saṃvat 297 caitraśuklapūrṇamāsyāṃ… śivācāryavijādharavarmeṇa likhāpitaṃ pustakaṃ | lekhakapaśupatināLikhitamiti” (lines 12556–12560) — the Nepalese era 297 = AD 1177. This is one of the oldest precisely dated āgamic manuscripts; the text itself (of the Vaṭula-Śālin line) is considerably older.
- “Mayūrāsana” here is the same trap-case as in the Vārāhītantra (§ 3.5): Kārttikeya’s mount, not a human āsana; nevertheless the vocabulary is common (“āsana” = that on which one sits).
- “Hastottāna” of the raised hand — a gesture common to the ascetic between the five fires (Ambikā, 1932) and the Buddha (2367): iconographically the “tapasvinī” position is an independent “posture” type in this text alongside padmāsana; the pañcāgni-tapas in padmāsana is a direct parallel to the ascetic postures in §§ 3–4.
- “Vīrāsana sthitāḥ sarve yogāsanā athāpi vā” (the 108 rudras) and “yogāsanañca yogīndraṃ yogābhyāsarataḥ” — yogāsana and vīrāsana as status attributes: the yogāsana for one’s own yogīndra (and for the dancing Naṭeśvara!), vīra/padma the alternated “sitting stances” of the lesser pantheon.
- Catuṣkikāsana (“four-membered seat”) and bhadrapīṭha here are four-legged thrones: the same “posture/seat” boundary as in the Muṇḍamālā (the “twelve thrones”), the Kubjikātantra (bhadrapīṭha = material and stand) and the Merutantra (hide-seats, §§ 3.4–4.2); the word “āsana” by itself does not decide whether it is a posture or a throne — only the scale-context (man/god/object) decides.
- Padmāsana as the posture of the “teacher-preceptor” (vyākhyāna-mudrā): Nīlakaṇṭha (1983–85), the Bhagavān (2101), the Buddha (2367; stylized as “hastottāna samādhinā”) — a single iconographic formula “the god-teacher sits in padmāsana”, later fixed by the Dakṣiṇāmūrti appearances (Kāmika U 11810; Mohacūḍottara 542).

6a. Dharmaputrikā (the Śivadharma corpus), ch. 2 āsanaprakaraṇa — eight postures with descriptions

Source status. The user sent the Sanskrit text of the chapter in Christèle Barois's publication: "Eight Yoga Postures in the Dharmaputrikā", the AyurYog blog (University of Vienna), 19.01.2017. A copy lies in `texts_extra/dharmaputrika_ch2_Barois2017_ayuryog.txt`. * In Barois's words, the text is based on the Wellcome Library apograph of a Nepalese manuscript of the 12th century and on the Kathmandu edition of 1998; the draft critical edition of Kafle and Acharya was also used. * The same publication says that the text was composed not later than the 10th century and that a manuscript of the 11th century is kept in Calcutta. * I have neither the manuscripts nor the edition, so the status is this: the primary source via the published Sanskrit text, not via my corpus. * Genre: the Dharmaputrikā is neither a tantra nor an āgama, but a text of the Śaiva Śivadharma corpus. I include it as the nearest Śaiva context. * The translation below is mine, from the Sanskrit, checked against Barois's English translation. Disagreements are marked.

"Having diligently purified mind and body with these eight means, let the yogin then turn to the practice of yoga. Having bowed to the chosen deity and the preceptor, turned to the east, pure, let the yogin assume [a posture]: padma, svastika, pīṭha, sthala, the āñjalika posture, ardhacandra, daṇḍa and also sarvatobhadra. Thus the chapter on postures has been handed down through eight names; now in due order I shall explain the differences of their arrangement".

padmāsana (5–9). Yogic posture; with a description. > āsthityottānapādāgrau granthivac cetaretarau | ūrvor upari vinyasya śliṣṭapārṣṇī susaṃsthitau ||5|| > uttānaṃ vāmahastāgraṃ pārṣṇyor upari vinyaset | tasyopari punas tadvat sthāpya dakṣiṇapallavam ||6|| > avakrastabdhanisyandaṃ gātraśailāvalambitam | bāhuyugmaṃ tathā kāryaṃ yathā mṛdulatādvayam ||7|| > samudbhavad athoṣṭhābhyām agāḍhapihitaṃ mukham | dantāgre nyasya jihvāgraṃ sthiraṃ grīvā ca mastakam ||8|| > nāsāgramātradṛṣṭyardhanimīlallocanadvayam | padmāsanam iti jñeyaṃ praśastaṃ sarvayogibhiḥ ||9||

Translation: * The upturned forefeet are placed on the thighs one upon the other, "like a knot", the heels tightly pressed together and well set. * The upturned fingers of the left hand are placed upon the heels, and on top of it likewise the right "sprout" (the palm). * Both arms, straight, motionless, hanging down from the rock-like body, should be like two tender creepers. * The mouth is loosely closed, the lips slightly protruding (?); the tip of the tongue at the tips of the teeth; the neck and the head motionless. * The eyes half-closed, the gaze only at the tip of the nose — this is padmāsana, praised by all yogins.

This is the most detailed description of padmāsana in all the collected material: the position of the palms, the arms, the mouth, the tongue, the head and the gaze.

svastikāsana (10–11). Yogic posture; with a description. > sthātavyau bhūtale pādāv āsanasthena yoginā | dakṣiṇaṃ vāmabhāge tu vāmapādan tu dakṣiṇe ||10|| > anyonyābhimukhaṃ kṛtvā mṛgaśīrṣakaradvayam | pūrvoktenaiva gātreṇa svastikāsanasaṃjñitam ||11||

pīṭhāsana (12). Yogic posture; with a description. > āsanasthena pādau dvau nyasyetāṃ bhūtale samam | jānudvaye hastatalaṃ sthāpya pīṭhāsanaṃ bhavet ||12||

sthalāsana (13). With a description. > evam evāsanābhāve bhuvi sthitvā prayatnataḥ | bāhūrujaṅghāsuśliṣṭaṃ sthalāsanam udīritam ||13||

“Just the same, but without a seat, placed on the ground, with effort, with arms, thighs and shins closely pressed together — this is called sthalāsana”. Barois understands “bhuvi sthitvā” as “standing”. Grammatically “being (sitting on the haunches?) on the ground” is also possible: with “without a seat” and “arms, thighs, shins closely pressed” this too is plausible. This remark is mine, and it has not been verified.

añjalikāsana (14). With a description (kneeling). > bhuvi sthitvā tu jānubhyāṃ stabdhagātreṇa yoginā | hṛdi hastapuṭaṃ kāryaṃ jñeyam añjalikāsanam ||14||

“Standing on the knees on the ground, with a rigid body, the yogin folds the palms “boat-wise” at the heart — this is to be known as añjalikāsana”.

ardhacandrāsana (15). With a description (half-kneeling). > talapādena vāmena jānunā dakṣiṇena ca | sthitvā hastapuṭaṃ kāryam ardhacandrāsanaṃ viduḥ ||15||

“Resting on the sole of the left foot and on the right knee, folding the palms “boat-wise” — this they know as ardhacandrāsana”. The definition differs from the ardhacandra of Kṣemarāja (ad Svacchandatantra 7.291: one foot on the ground, the other on the thigh) and of the Suprabheda 3.61 (the ankles level, the soles toward the perineum).

daṇḍāsana (16). With a description. > agre prasāritau pādau suśliṣṭau bhūmisaṃsthitau | upaveśyārdhakāyaṃ tu daṇḍāsanam iti smṛtam ||16||

“Both feet stretched forward, tightly pressed together, lying on the ground; having seated the lower half of the body — this is known as daṇḍāsana”. Sitting with the legs stretched out.

sarvatobhadrāsana (17). With a description (unclear). > samapādalabdhabhūmir adhijānukarānvitam | sambaddham asambaddhaṃ vā sarvatobhadram āsanaṃ ||17||

Literally: “touching the ground with the evenly placed feet, with the hands at (above?) the knees, bound or unbound — this is the sarvatobhadra posture”. Barois translates: the hands between the knees touch the ground level with the feet. “Bound/unbound” may mean “with a band (yogapaṭṭa) or without it”; this conjecture is mine.

Colophon: iti dharmaputrikāyāṃ saṃhitāyāṃ āsanaprakaraṇaṃ nāma dvitīyaḥ paṭalaḥ.

The parallel with Kauṇḍinya (my observation on two verified texts). Kauṇḍinya, Pañcārthabhāṣya on Pāśupatasūtra 1.16/17, gives seven names (in the reading of Mallinson & Singleton): padmaka, svastika, upasthāñjalika, ardhacandra, pīṭhaka, daṇḍāyata, sarvatobhadra. The Dharmaputrikā 2.3 gives eight: padma, svastika, pīṭha, sthala, āñjalika, ardhacandra, daṇḍa, sarvatobhadra. All seven of Kauṇḍinya’s positions are in the Dharmaputrikā (upasthāñjalika ≈ āñjalika, daṇḍāyata ≈ daṇḍa); only sthala is extra. Hence the Pāśupatas and the Śivadharma had a common, evidently ancient set of postures. It includes postures on a seat, standing and kneeling — not only “crossed legs”. By secondary data, the Niśvāsas’ Nayasūtra (⚠) also contains ardhacandra and añjalika.

Verses with translation: Dharmaputrikā, chapter 2 (āsanaprakaraṇa), 1–17: the eight postures

Source — the Sanskrit text of the chapter in the publication: Christèle Barois, “Eight Yoga Postures in the Dharmaputrikā”, the blog of the AyurYog project (University of Vienna), 19.01.2017. The copy was sent by the compendium’s customer; it lies in the working materials (`texts_extra/dharmaputrika_ch2_Barois2017_ayuryog.txt`). In Barois’s words, the text is based on the Wellcome Library apograph of a Nepalese manuscript of the 12th century and on the Kathmandu edition of 1998; the draft critical edition by Niranjan Kafle and Anil Kumar Acharya was also used. I have neither the manuscripts nor the editions. The Dharmaputrikā belongs to the Śaiva Śivadharma corpus; it is neither a tantra nor an āgama. Chapter 1 enumerates the eight auxiliary means to which 2.1 refers.

Word-by-word gloss

(2.1) ашṭабхиḥ — with eight; сāдханаиḥ — means; ебхиḥ — these; читтам — the mind; кāйам — the body; ча — and; йатнатаḥ — diligently; шодхайитвā — having purified; татаḥ — then; йогӣ — the yogin; йога-абхйāсам — the practice of yoga; самāчарет — let him perform.

(2.2) ишṭа-девам — to the chosen deity; намаскр̥тйа — having bowed; упāдхйāйам — to the preceptor; ча ева — and; йатнатаḥ — diligently; āтишṭхет — let him assume [a posture]; прāṅмукхаḥ — turned to the east; бхӯтвā — having become; шучиḥ — pure; йогӣ — the yogin; вишешатаḥ — especially.

(2.3) падма-свастика-пӣṭхāни — padma, svastika, pīṭha; стхалам — sthala; аn̄джалика-āсанам — the āñjalika posture; ардхачандрам — ardhacandra; ча — and; даṇдам — daṇḍa; ча — and; сарватобхадрам — sarvatobhadra; ева ча — and also.

(2.4) евам — thus; нāмабхиḥ ашṭāбхиḥ — by eight names; āсана-пракараṇам — the chapter on postures; смр̥там — is handed down; тешāм — their; саṃстхāна-бхедам — the difference in arrangement; ту — then; правакшйāми — I shall set forth; йатхāкрамам — in due order.

(2.5) āстхитйа — holding; уттāна-пāда-аграу — the upturned forefeet; грантхиват — like a knot; ча — and; итаретарау — one upon the other; ӯрвоḫ упари — on the thighs; винйасйа — having placed; ш́лишṭа-пāршṇӣ — with pressed-together heels; су-самṃстхитау — well set.

(2.6) уттāнам — upturned; вāма-хаста-аграм — the fingers of the left hand; пāршṇйоḫ упари — on the heels; винйасет — let him place; тасйа упари — on top of it; пунаḫ — again; тадват — likewise; стхāпйа — having placed; дакшиṇа-паллавам — the right “sprout” (palm).

(2.7) авāкра-стабдха-нисйандам — straight, motionless, flowing down; гāтра-ш́аила-аваламбитам — hanging from the rock of the body; бāху-йугмам — both arms; татхā — so; кāрйам — should be made; йатхā — that [they be] like; мр̣ду-латā-двайам — two soft creepers.

(2.8) самудбхават — protruding (?); атха — then; ошṭхāбхйāм — by the lips; агāд̣ха-пихитам — loosely covered; мукхам — the mouth; данта-агре — at the tips of the teeth; нйасйа — having placed; джихвā-аграм — the tip of the tongue; стхирам — motionless; грӣвā — the neck; ча — and; мастакам — the head.

(2.9) нāсā-агра-мāтра-др̣шṭи-ардха-нимӣлат-лочана-двайам — both eyes half-closed, the gaze just at the tip of the nose; падма-āсанам — padmāsana; ити — thus; джн̃ейам — is to be known; праш́астам — praised; сарва-йогибхиḫ — by all yogins.

(2.11) анйонйа-абхимукхам — facing each other; кр̣твā — having made; мр̣га-ш́ӣрша-кара-двайам — both hands in the “deer-head” gesture; пӯрва-уктена ева — as said before; гāтреṇа — with the body; свастикāсана-самд̣жн̃итам — is called svastikāsana.

(2.12) āсана-стхена — by one seated on a seat; пāдау двау — both feet; нйасйетāм — let them be set; бхӯтале — on the ground; самам — evenly; джāну-двайе — on both knees; хаста-талам — the palms; стхāпйа — having laid; пӣṭха-āсанам — pīṭhāsana (the “seat posture”, the “throne posture”); бхавет — becomes.

(2.13) евам ева — just the same; āсана-абхāве — in the absence of a seat; бхуви — on the ground; стхитвā — placed (or: standing); прайатнатаḫ — with effort; бāху-ӯру-джанӳгхā-су-ш́лишṭам — with arms, thighs and shins closely pressed together; стхала-āсанам — sthalāsana (the “ground posture”); удӣритам — is declared.

(2.14) бхуви — on the ground; стхитвā — standing; ту — then; джāнубхйāм — on the knees; стабдха-гāтреṇа — with a rigid body; йогинā — the yogin; хр̣ди — at the heart;

хаста-пуṭам — the palms folded scoop-wise; кāрйам — is to be made; джн̃ейам — is to be known as; аn̄джалика-āсанам — añjalikāsana (the “folded-palms posture”).

(2.15) тала-пāдена вāмена — on the sole of the left foot; джāнунā дакшиṇена — on the right knee; ча — and; стхитвā — standing; хаста-пуṭам кāрйам — the palms are to be folded scoop-wise; ардхачандра-āсанам — ardhacandrāsana (the “half-moon posture”); видуḥ — they know.

(2.16) агре — forward; прасāритау — stretched; пāдау — the feet; су-ш́лишṭау — tightly pressed together; бхӯми-саṃстхитау — lying on the ground; упавеш́йа — having seated; ардха-кāйам — the half-body; ту — then; даṇда-āсанам — daṇḍāsana (the “staff posture”); ити смр̣там — so it is remembered.

(2.17) сама-пāда-лабдха-бхӯмиḥ — having reached the ground evenly with the feet (?); адхи-джāну-кара-анвитам — having the hands at the knees (?); самбаддхам — bound (presumably with the yogic band); асамбаддхам — unbound; вā — or; сарватобхадрам āсанам — the sarvatobhadra posture (“auspicious from all sides”).

(the colophon) ити — thus; дхармапутрикāйāм саṃхитāйāм — in the Dharmaputrikā saṃhitā; āсана-пракараṇам нāма — called “the chapter on postures”; двитӣйаḥ паṭалаḥ — the second chapter.

Literal translation

2.1–2. Having diligently purified mind and body with these eight means, let the yogin then turn to the practice of yoga. Having diligently bowed to the chosen deity and the preceptor, turned to the east, pure, let the yogin especially assume [one of the postures].

2.3–4. Padma, svastika, pīṭha, sthala, añjalikāsana, ardhacandra, daṇḍa and sarvatobhadra — thus by eight names the chapter on postures has been handed down. The differences in their arrangement I shall set forth in due order.

2.5–9. Holding the upturned forefeet one upon the other, like a knot, placed on the thighs, with the heels pressed together and well set, one places the upturned fingers of the left hand on the heels, and on top of it likewise the right “sprout”. Both arms should be made so that, straight, motionless, flowing down, hanging from the rock of the body, they are like two soft creepers. Then the mouth, protruding by the lips (?), is loosely closed; the tip of the tongue placed at the tips of the teeth; the neck and the head motionless; both eyes half-closed, the gaze just at the tip of the nose. This is to be known as padmāsana, praised by all yogins.

2.10–11. The yogin, sitting on a seat, should set the feet on the ground: the right one on the left side, and the left one on the right; having made both hands “deer-heads” facing each other, with the body as said before — [this] is called svastikāsana.

2.12. For one seated on a seat both feet should be set evenly on the ground; having laid the palms on both knees — this is pīṭhāsana.

2.13. Just the same, in the absence of a seat, placed with effort on the ground, with arms, thighs and shins closely pressed together — this is declared sthalāsana.

2.14. Standing on the knees on the ground, with a rigid body, the yogin should fold the palms scoop-wise at the heart — this is to be known as añjalikāsana.

2.15. Standing on the sole of the left foot and on the right knee, the palms are to be folded scoop-wise — [this] they know as ardhacandrāsana.

2.16. The feet stretched forward, tightly pressed together, lying on the ground; having seated the half-body — this is remembered as daṇḍāsana.

2.17. [Sitting], having reached the ground evenly with the feet (?), with the hands at the knees (?), bound or unbound — this is the sarvatobhadra posture.

The colophon. Thus in the Dharmaputrikā saṃhitā [ends] the second chapter, called “the chapter on postures”.

Smooth translation

Having purified mind and body with the eight auxiliary means, the yogin proceeds to the exercises. First he reverently bows to his deity and preceptor, then, pure, sits facing east in one of the postures. The postures are eight: the lotus (padma), svastika, the “throne” (pīṭha), the “ground” (sthala), the “folded palms” (āñjalika), the “half-moon” (ardhacandra), the “staff” (daṇḍa) and the “all-sides auspicious” (sarvatobhadra).

The lotus: the feet, soles facing upward, lie on the thighs one upon the other, like a knot, the heels tightly pressed together. The left palm lies upturned on the heels, the right one likewise on top of it. The arms hang straight and still alongside the rock-still body, like two soft creepers. The mouth is loosely closed, the tongue-tip touches the teeth, the neck and head are motionless, the eyes half-closed, the gaze fixed on the tip of the nose. This posture is praised by all yogins.

Svastika: the yogin sits on a seat, the feet stand on the ground crosswise — the right one on the left, the left on the right; the palms face each other in the “deer-head” gesture, and the body is kept as in the lotus. The throne: sitting on a seat, one sets both feet evenly on the ground and lays the palms on the knees. “Ground”: the same, but without a seat, directly on the ground, pressing arms, thighs and shins closely together. “Folded palms”: one stands kneeling, the body motionless, the palms folded scoop-wise at the heart. “Half-moon”: one rests on the left foot and the right knee, the palms folded likewise. “Staff”: one sits with the legs stretched forward and tightly closed. “All-sides auspicious”: the feet stand evenly on the ground, the hands at the knees; this posture is done with a band or without.

Notes

- The translation is mine (AI), from the Sanskrit on Barois’s text. I checked it against her English translation; the disagreements are indicated below.

- 2.13: Barois translates āsanābhāve bhuvi sthitvā as “not seated, standing on the ground”, that is, she understands sthalāsana as a standing posture. I understand āsanābhāve as “in the absence of a seat”, and evam eva as “the same [as pīṭhāsana]”. Then it is sitting directly on the ground. Grammatically both understandings are possible.
- 2.17 is unclear. Barois understands it thus: the palms between the knees reach the ground level with the feet. The words sambaddham asambaddhaṃ vā (“bound or unbound”) I understand as “with the yogic band or without it”, but no band is named in the text.
- 2.8: samudbhavad … oṣṭhābhyām: Barois — “protruding by virtue of the two lips”. The sense is not quite clear.
- Devanagari and Cyrillic are generated automatically from IAST (rules: Introduction, § 6.3).

7. Not verified against the primary source (⚠ — the e-texts are not in my corpus)

All the entries of this section are open gaps of the corpus. They can be closed only with the materials of Appendix A (items A1–A3 and others); without them the primary source is unavailable anywhere in open access (checked: archive.org, GRETIL, Leiden, Hamburg, Muktabodha).

- Niśvāsa Nayasūtra — now checked against Dominic Goodall’s English translation in Roots of Yoga 3.3 (Goodall et al. 2015: 466, 483–4). I still do not have the Sanskrit, so the status (only the translation is known, ◐) — “by the edition’s translation”. In detail see § 10.
- ~~Mataṅgapārameśvara, Yogapāda~~ — now verified against Bhatt’s 1982 edition (scans): four postures with descriptions (2.12–22) and karaṇa (2.22c–29), see § 12.
- ~~Dharmaputrikā~~ — now there is the Sanskrit text of chapter 2 (the sent publication of Barois 2017), see § 6a.
- Jayadrathayāmala — verified against the primary source (17.10.2026): the e-text M00681 = ṣaṭka 4 of manuscript NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 1-1468 (that very dated manuscript of 1626/7). The posture of the phetkārī-mudrā (“4.2.612–622” Roots of Yoga) + three more late places of the “six-pack” are translated from this file (see § 10.3 and the “Verses with translation” block). Tantrasadbhāva (the chapters 1, 3, 9, 18, 28 edited by Bang — no postures) and Siddhayogeśvarīmata (Törzsök: 16.47 vīrāsana, 22.10 paryaṅkāsana) — see § 14. Raurava — no e-text. Kiraṇa 58 is now checked against two IFP transcripts (§ 13). For Parākhya 14.5–7 there is Sanskrit via Kafle’s quotation (§ 11). The Kiraṇa on vīra is attested through a quotation (§ 1.10).

- Tirumantiram (Tamil; “126 āsanas” by secondary data) is not part of the Sanskrit corpus.

Outside the tantras, but Śaiva (Atimārga) — verified. Kauṇḍinya, Pañcārthabhāṣya on Pāśupatasūtra 1.16 (GRETIL GRETIL file sa_pAzupatasUtra-comm, psbh_1.16:10): > upaspṛśya padmakasvastikopasthāñjalikārdhacandrapīṭhakadaṇḍāyatasarvatobhadrādīnām anyatamenāsanabandhena prāṅmukha udaṅmukho vā upaviśya…

The reading is disputable (clarification after § 11). Mallinson and Singleton (ch. 3, note 2; translation 4.7) read upasthāñjalika as one name — “the hands joined at the loins”. Then the names are seven: padmaka, svastika, upasthāñjalika, ardhacandra, pīṭhaka (“the small seat”), daṇḍāyata (“stretched like a staff”), sarvatobhadra. However Kafle (2015, note 765) counts eight postures in Kauṇḍinya: Padmaka, Svastika, Upastha, Añjalika, …. The compound allows both divisions, so earlier I had not been “mistaken”, but had chosen one of the two. In favour of Mallinson & Singleton speaks Sarvajñānottara Yogapāda 10: upasthāpyāṃ jaliṃ [sic] in my M00327, in Kafle’s papers — upasthātyāñjaliṃ; this looks like a corrupt upasthāñjaliṃ, where añjali “at the loins” is one posture. Their reference is given as “ad 1.17”; in GRETIL this fragment is marked psbh_1.16:10. This is one more confirmation of pīṭha as the name of a posture and a close parallel to the Dharmaputrikā list (see § 6a).

Verses with translation: Pāśupatasūtra 1.16 with Kauṇḍinya’s bhāṣya: the source of the oldest āsana list (padmaka—sarvatobhadra) and the technique of prāṇāyāma

Source: sa_pAzupatasUtra : 79; sa_pAzupatasUtra-comm : psbh_1.16:10–13`.

Pāśupatasūtra 1.16 (Atimārga, the earliest Śaiva layer, around the 5th century and earlier) consists of two words: “prāṇāyāmaṃ kṛtvā” — “having made prāṇāyāma”. In Kauṇḍinya’s Pañcārthabhāṣya this sūtra is expanded into the earliest extant list of yogic postures: eight āsanas with the variant “or any preferred one” — and then: turn east or north, raise the neck slightly and do prāṇāyāma until the winds are restrained, with two animal comparisons for the signs of success. This is the background against which the lists of the Sarvajñānottara, Niśvāsa, Kiraṇa and Bṛhatkālottara flourished; the members of the lists coincide in names almost one to one.

Word-by-word gloss

(the sūtra) прāṇāйāмам кр̣твā — having made the stopping [or: the shortening] of the breath — [continued in 1.17: let him repeat the raudrī-gāyatrī].

and the like; прāṅмукхаḥ удаṅмукхаḥ вā упавиш́йа — having sat facing east or north; етāни аṅгāни кр̣твā гр̣вāм уннāмйа — having performed these [indicated] parts [of the preparation], having raised the neck slightly; пӯраṇа пӯрвакаḥ вā речака пӯрвакаḥ вā — with the filling first or with the exhaling first [“pūraṇa” sic for “pūraka”]; тāват картавйаḥ йāват нигр̣хӣтā вāйаваḥ дхйāнӣбхӯтаḥ ча бхавати — for so long he does [the prāṇāyāma] until the winds are restrained and he [comes into] the state of contemplation [of inner fullness].

(the bhāṣya: the signs (12–13)) нигр̣хӣтāнāм ту лакшаṇам йадā кӯрмават антаḥш́арӣре уччхвāса пратйуччхвāсāḥ вартанте — and the sign of the restrained [winds]: when, as with the tortoise, the inhalations and exhalations occur [inside the body, as though] moving inside [“antaḥśarīre”]; сваччха индрийаḥ ча бхавати тадā мантавйā нигр̣хӣтā вāйаваḥ ити — and when the sense organs [become] pellucid-calm — then the winds are to be deemed restrained; татаḥ ш́анаиḥ ш́анаиḥ мокташйā нāсикайā — then [the breath] is to be released little by little through the nose; йатхā утпала паттрам апи нāсāпуṭастхам на кампайати — so that even a lotus petal [lying] at the nose does not tremble.

Literal translation

“Having made prāṇāyāma”. On this ground, having performed the ablution and assumed with a binding any of the postures — padmaka, svastika, upastha, añjalika, the half-moon, the small seat, “stretched like a staff”, “all-gracious” and the like, — having sat facing east or north, having performed these parts [of the preparation] and raised the neck slightly — the filling first or the exhaling first — he does [the prāṇāyāma] until the winds are restrained and he [comes into] the contemplative state. The sign of the restrained [winds]: when the breathings occur [inside] as with the tortoise and the senses are pellucid-calm. Then release little by little through the nose — so that even a lotus petal at the nose does not tremble.

Smooth translation

Do prāṇāyāma. For this, having performed the ablution, sit — facing east or north — in any suitable posture: padmaka, svastika, upastha, añjalika, the half-moon, the small seat, “stretched like a staff”, “all-gracious” and the like; having raised the neck slightly, do prāṇāyāma — the filling first or the exhaling first — until the winds are restrained and the mind enters contemplative fullness. The sign of the winds’ restraint: the breathing occurs [imperceptibly] inside, as with the tortoise, and the senses become pellucid; then let the air out through the nose so slowly that even a lotus petal laid at the nose does not tremble.

Notes

- Eight names or seven? The compound “padmakasvastikopasthāñjalikārdhacandra…” allows two divisions: Kafle (2015, note 765) counts eight (upastha and añjalika separately), Mallinson & Singleton — seven (upasthāñjalika as one, “the hands joined at the loins”). See the comparison in § 7; this is not my parsing error, but an objective ambiguity.

- The compound in GRETIL runs without breaks: I give the names’ segmentation after Kafle; “ādīnām” (“and so on”) leaves the list open — an example of a “closed-open” class of postures.
- “Grīvām unnāmya” — “having raised the neck”: the vertical axis of the body here is already the norm, though the word “samakāya” is absent; later the same element is “samaṃ śiraḥ” in Sarvajñānottara YP 11 and “śarīraṃ daṇḍavat kāryaṃ” in Mataṅga YP 2 (§ 12).
- The animal comparisons: the successful prāṇāyāma is “as of the tortoise” (ucchvāsa-pratyucchvāsa “inside”, without visible movement) and the “fullness inside, as of the elephant” higher up in the bhāṣya (psbh_1.16:11: “yadā dantivad antaḥśarīraṃ pūrṇaṃ bhavati”); the final formula — “the lotus petal at the nose” — will survive into haṭha-yoga (cf. the Haṭhapradīpikā).
- This is the only layer of the corpus where the āsanas serve the Pāśupata observance (the purification of the kaluṣa after contact with the forbidden, sūtras 1.15–17): one got defiled by talk or sight — one performed the ablution, sat in an āsana, made prāṇāyāma, repeated the raudrī-gāyatrī. The ritual function of the āsana is primary with respect to the “yogic” one.

8. Trap-terms (what occurs, but is not a posture)

- pīṭha: usually a plinth, a seat or a sacred site (pīṭhopapīṭha, bhadrapīṭha for an idol). As a posture — in Kauṇḍinya (pīṭhaka), in Dharmaputrikā 2.12 (pīṭhāsana: sitting on a seat, the feet evenly on the ground, the palms on the knees) and in the Haṭha-yoga block (matsyendrapīṭha, caturāśīti pīṭheṣu, where pīṭha is simply a synonym of āsana).
- padmāsana / siṃhāsana / yogāsana / anantāsana / vimalāsana / kūrmāsana in pūjā — the layers of the deity’s throne (āsanapūjā). In the architectural āgamas padmāsana is also the lotus base of a column (Aṃśumat, Kāmika, Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati 28–29).
- kūrmāsana: a seat in the shape of a tortoise (Makuṭa 2-111; Karaṇāgama 71 Muktabodha e-text no. M00208, keyed from the edition: śaivabhāratīśodhapratiṣṭhāna, ‹vArANasI›, 1994; line number in that file: 279; Yogaja Yogajāgama: Muktabodha e-text no. M00272, keyed from a manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T0007A and T0007B; line numbers in that file: 994, 21688). As a posture — in the Kālottara (GOML (the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai)) and in the Rudrayāmala (and in the Haṭhapradīpikā part of manuscript M00501).
- śūladaṇḍāsana: a term of mantra-extraction (Kubjikāmatatantra, Parameśvarīmata, TĀ).

- sādhyasiddhāsana / sarvamantrāsana: the seats in the Śrīcakra (Vāmakeśvarī, Yoginīhṛdaya, Tantrarāja, Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava).
- daṇḍāsana: in TĀ 30.31 — the prāṇa "standing like a staff" (mantra). In the Acintyaviśva — the posture at the daṇḍavrata. In the Hāhārāva and the Vārāhī — the seat of the goddess.
- svastika: often a pattern or a figure of the maṇḍala (TĀ 28.425; svastikādyair alaṅkṛte).
- ekapāda: a deity's name (Ekapāda-Rudra) — everywhere.
- mayūrāsana in the Kaumārī — the peacock vāhana.
- vīrāsana in the kaula ritual — often the "hero's seat" (a corpse, a hide), not crossed legs.
- karaṇa: also "organ, instrument" or a grammatical term. The meaning "the body's setting into a posture" is attested only in Kubjikāmatatantra 23.114, Bṛhatkālottara and Mataṅga ⚠.

10. The check against Mallinson & Singleton's Roots of Yoga (Penguin, 2017)

Source: the text of the book from archive.org, sent by the user (OCR djvu). Saved in `texts_extra/roots_of_yoga_djvu.txt`. The book contains no Sanskrit, only translations, so the places known only from it have the status "by the translation", ◐ (translation only).

The authors' overall assessment (the introduction to ch. 3). In the first-millennium tantras the āsana is "relatively unimportant" and is not counted among the limbs of yoga. The postures there are few, and all are simple seated ones, for meditation, japa and prāṇāyāma; in particular, they give stability when, at prāṇāyāma, the body is "jolted" (udghāta). Non-seated postures appear as āsanas only at the end of the millennium, then in Hemacandra and in haṭha-yoga.

This agrees with my material on the early tantras (Svacchanda, Mālinīvijayottaratantra, Niśvāsa, Mṛgendra, Netra). But the South-Indian āgamas — the Kālottara (GOML (the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai)) ch. 25 and the Acintyaviśvasādākhya — already describe non-seated postures: the mayūra, the sūcī, the ekapāda, the posture with the feet behind the head. Apparently these are later, post-classical texts; the authors of Roots of Yoga do not treat them.

New places, or places refined thanks to the book

1. Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā, Nayasūtra 4.14c–15d and 4.104–106 (Roots of Yoga 3.3, Goodall's translation). Yogic posture; name only. ◐ — an open gap (A1): the Sanskrit of these verses is available only in Goodall et al. 2015; below everything follows the translation; the parallels in Kafle's notes — see § 11.

- 4.14c–15d: “the svastika, the lotus (padmaka), the bhadra, the half-moon (ardhacandra), the extended one (prasārita), the supported one (sāpāśraya), the folded-palms one (añjalika) and the yogapaṭṭa ([or] the comfortable one) — these eight chief postures are set forth briefly”.
- 4.16–17: having assumed one of them, honour Śiva, bow to the former teachers, concentrate the mind in the head, raise the eyes upward.
- 4.104–106 — the second list: “the lotus, or the svastika, the bhadra, the moon (candra), the supported one, the yogapaṭṭa, or the comfortable posture”; the tongue at the palate, the teeth do not touch, the body straight, the gaze at the tip of the nose.

Parallels in my corpus: Svacchanda 7.290–291 (almost the same list, including sāpāśraya and yogapaṭṭa) and the Bṛhatkālottara’s āsanāṣṭaka (prasārita, yogapaṭṭa). Añjalika coincides with Dharmaputrikā 2.14 and Kauṇḍinya.

2. Niśvāsa, Nayasūtra 1.29 f. (Roots of Yoga ch. 3, note 7; open gap — A1): the practitioner forms the shapes of the alphabet’s letters with his body. Some letters require particular positions of body parts (e.g. 1.43). This is not an āsana, but these are bodily positions. ◐ (translation only)
   - Additional confirmation (not a nyāsa). Ben Williams, “Cosmogenesis and Phonematic Emanation”, Oxford Handbook of Tantric Studies (2023), note 17, quotes a translation of Nayasūtra 1.29–30: “Without knowing the tattvas [as] situated in the body, and all the letters as they are situated in the body, one cannot be liberated. All these I shall teach you [as they are] written visibly. Some have the shape of parts of the body; some have the shape of the [whole] body [arranged in particular ways]”.
   - Note 19 there quotes Goodall et al. 2015: 74, n. 102: “…the passage instructing the sādhaka to shape his body into the written form of all the letters of the syllabary in Nayasūtra 1:32ff.”.
   - Note 15 there: on the script (the shape of the signs) meant in this section — Goodall et al. 2015: 36 and 406 and onward.
   - Result: the point is the shape of the written signs (the graphemes) assumed by the body or its parts, not a nyāsa (the laying of syllables onto points of the body). I still have no Sanskrit — ◐ (translation only).
3. Jayadrathayāmala 4.2.612–622, *phetkārīmudrā (Roots of Yoga 6.1.2). Yogic posture (a magical rite); with a description. ✔ verified against the primary source — closed 17.10.2026 (A2): the e-text of precisely manuscript NAK (the National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 1-1468 (Muktabodha M00681, rev. 09.04.2026) was obtained and is attached below in the “Verses with translation” block: the Roots of Yoga translation was checked against the Sanskrit and confirmed; three more places of ṣaṭka 4 with postures were added. “Sit down, alert, put the left foot at the anus, and extend the right leg, slightly bent; bend the arms, clench the fists and put them at the earlobes; look upwards and make the terrifying, horrific howl of a jackal”. In the authors’ words, this is a posture close to the mahāmudrā of haṭha-yoga.

Verses with translation: Jayadrathayāmala, ṣaṭka 4 (M00681): the vidhi of the phetkārī-mudrā with its posture (“4.2.612–622” Roots of Yoga) and three more places of the “six-pack” with postures

Source: Jayadrathayāmala Ṣaṭka 4: Muktabodha e-text no. M00681, keyed from a manuscript: NAK 1.1468, NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms) b122/4; paper; Newari script; 237 folios; scribed in A.D. 1626/7; line numbers in that file: 2283–2310; 1182–1185; 1677–1680; 2499–2508.

The Jayadrathayāmala (24 000 stanzas in four ṣaṭkas) was long inaccessible to the corpus: the place with the posture (the phetkārī-mudrā) was known only from the English translation in Roots of Yoga 6.1.2 (“4.2.612–622”). On 17.10.2026 the Muktabodha e-text M00681 = ṣaṭka 4 was obtained, keyed from manuscript NAK 1-1468 / NGMPP B 122/4 (AD 1626/7) — the very one Sanderson describes (Sanderson 2009, bibliography); gap A2 is closed. The “phetkārīmudrā vidhiḥ” section (paṭala 2, the “mudrākośa”) in the file is lines 2283–2310; to the Roots of Yoga numbering 612–622 answer exactly 11 of its stanzas (from “ataḥ paraṃ pravakṣyāmi” to the colophon). The practice: at the burning-ground, on a platform (vedi), the body as in the mahāmudrā — the left foot at the anus, the right leg extended and slightly bent, the fists at the earlobes, the face turned upward — the wild “howl of a jackal”. Further on, three more places of the same ṣaṭka are given where postures are named: svastikāsana (the śānti-mudrā section), daṇḍakāsana (the mudrākāntā section) and the seated body-setting in the karaṃkiṇī section (a soft seat, body/head/neck straight).

Word-by-word gloss

(The announcement (612)) атаҳ парам правакшйāми мудрāм сарввоттамоттамāм — next I shall set forth the mudrā, the best of the best [sic “mudrā” without the final -m]; пхеткāриṇī ити йā проктā сарвва сиддхи пхала удайā — the one called Phetkāriṇī, giving the rise of the fruit of all achievements [sic “sarvva-” with doubled v].

(The place (613)) палāла и тр̣пта пӯрṇа ātмā ш́маш́ānастхаҳ др̣дха вратаҳ — his self sated with flesh (palāla), full [Roots of Yoga: “full — satiated by flesh”], abiding at the burning-ground, firm in the vow; ведимадхйам самāш́ритйа мудрāм рāджн̃īм прабаṃдхайет — having settled in the middle of the platform (vedi), let him bind the queen of mudrās.

(The conditions; the posture (614–616)) атха варддхита саṃдхāне ш́ӯнйа веш́мани атха вā нараҳ — or — in an empty house whose joints-cracks (saṃdhāna) are filled in (varddhita), a man [sic “veśme” for veśmani; Roots of Yoga: “in an empty house whose interstices have been filled in”]; анйатхā на ева баṃдхета баṃдхāт дошам праджāйате — otherwise let him not bind [the mudrā] at all — from [misbegotten] binding harm arises; упавиш́йа гуде кшипйа вāмапādам атаṃдритаҳ — having sat and placed the left foot at the anus, without slackening [the attention] [Roots of Yoga: “Sit down, alert, put the left foot at the anus…”]; прасāрайе дакшиṇам ча йшат саṃкучитам прийе — extend the right one, slightly bent, my dear [Roots of Yoga: “…and extend the right leg, slightly bent, my dear”]; двигуṇйкр̣тйа бāхӯ двау карṇ̣намӯле сумушṭике — having bent both arms, [applying] the firm fists to the earlobes; ӯрддхавактрā надет раудрам крошṭрā рāвам (су)дāруṇам — with the face upward let him emit the wild, (most) fearsome howl of a jackal [Roots of Yoga: “Look upwards and make the terrifying, horrific howl of a jackal”; cf. the mudrā’s name: phetkārī = “the howler”].

(The performance (617)) круддха нетраҳ круддха мукхаҳ кр̣ӯрāм рāвāм самуннадет — with wrathful eyes and a wrathful face let him raise the cruel howl; др̣к чхире мадирā масйā мадхйам ча амр̣там уттамам — [a dark half-verse; Roots of Yoga also skips the first words and translates the tail: “and the best middle nectar of immortality” = “the highest middle nectar of immortality”]; евaṃ випула дхунвасва пхеткāриṇи самуччарет — thus, shuddering violently, perform the [mudrā] Phetkāri; евам мелāпам āпноти гхаṭикā двайа антаре — thus he attains melāpa (the meeting/fusion with the yoginīs) within two ghaṭikās [about 48 minutes]; каṃпате йогинī чакрам бхӣта бхӣтам сувихвалам — the circle of the yoginīs trembles, frightened, in utter disarray; ваш́агāх̣ тасйа тишт̣ханти йатхā бхаирава нāйаках̣ — they stand subject to him, as [the circle is subject] to Bhairava the lord; ешā тава самāкхйāтā сарвва карма карī нр̣нāм — this [mudrā] is set forth to you, performing every work for men; пхеткāрī нāма мудрā йш́ī джагати асмин судурлабхā — Phetkārī by name, the queen of the mudrās, hard to attain in this world; нāнā мудрāсу дева йш́и баḿдханāт саḿпракāтитā — among many mudrās she is famed [for her] binding, O mistress of the gods; йадā проктах̣ сādхака индраих̣ гуроḥ вактрāт махā уттамā — when this highest one is uttered by the best sādhakas (received) from the guru's mouth; апаш́чимам тадā джанме джн̃āтавйам вӣра пумʹгаваих̣ — then the bulls of the heroes are to know: [this is] the last ["apaścima" sic] birth; йадā карн̣н̣а патхам йāтā тадā йуктах̣ на саḿш́айах̣ — when she has entered upon the path of hearing — then [the pupil] is conjoined [with her], without doubt.

(The śānti-mudrā: svastikāsana) атха ш́āнтā абхидхāнā ийам траилокйа ваш́а карикā — and this one, by the name "the Appeasing", which subjects the three worlds; тава вакшйāми сущ́роḥни йайā сиддхйати сādхаках̣ — to you, fair-hipped one, I shall set forth, through which the sādhaka achieves; свастикāсанам āрӯдхах̣ баḿдха мудрāм махāбалāм — having mounted the svastikāsana, bind the mighty mudrā [then comes the placing of the fingers].

(The mudrākāнтā: daṇḍakāsana) прадакшин̣ена хастена нрттам йах̣ куруте сакрт — he who with the right hand [or: "having gone sunwise"] performs the dance movement; даṇḍакāсанам āрӯдхах̣ рджу грӣва ш́ирах̣ стхитах̣ — sitting in daṇḍakāsana, holding the neck and the head straight.

(The karaḿkiṇī: the seat and the body-setting) стхānам āсādйа нирдвандвам судхӯпа āмода мамʹтхарам — having found a serene place dense with the fragrance of incense; мадирā ānанда чаитанйах̣ пушпа срак гандха чарчитах̣ — with a consciousness [full of] inebriate joy, smeared with flower garlands and perfumes; мр̣дум āсанам āстхāйа нетра падвāди гумʹт̣ханам — having sat on a soft seat, having covered (?) the eyes and so on ["netrapadvādiguṃṭhana" sic]; пӯрвваḿукхах̣ татра рӯдхах̣ сама кāйа ш́ирах̣ дхарах̣ — facing east, settled there, the body, the head and the neck straight ["samakāya śirodharaḥ": kāya-śiraḥ-śira = body-neck-head in one line]; спашт̣а вакшах̣ рджу грӣваḥ вāмам уттāнам āчарет — the chest broad, the neck straight; let him expose the left [leg?] upward [sic: "extended upward"; then comes the placing of the thumb and forefinger of the right hand behind the back].

Literal translation

"Next I shall set forth the mudrā, the best of the best: the one called Phetkāriṇī, which yields the fruit of all achievements. Having sated (?) oneself, abiding at the burning-ground, firm in the vow, let him bind the queen of mudrās in the middle of the platform — when the conjunction has grown, or in an empty house; otherwise do not bind: from binding harm arises. Having sat, place the left foot at the anus, without slackening [the attention]; extend the right one, slightly bent. Bend both arms, apply the firm fists to the earlobes; with the face upward emit the wild, fearsome howl of a jackal. With wrathful eyes, with a wrathful face raise the cruel howl [on the middle path of amṛta]. Thus, shuddering violently, perform the [mudrā] — and within two ghaṭikās you will attain melāpa. The circle of the yoginīs will tremble, frightened and disarrayed; they will stand subject to him, as to Bhairava the lord. This Phetkārī, the queen of mudrās, performing every work, is set forth to you; she is hard to attain in this world and famed among many mudrās for her binding. When it is received from the guru's mouth by the best sādhakas, the heroes are to know: this is the last birth; when she has entered upon the path of hearing — there is no doubt". — [The śānti-mudrā:] "And this one, by the name 'the Appeasing', subjecting the three worlds, I shall set forth to you, fair-hipped one; through it the sādhaka achieves. Sitting in svastikāsana, bind the mighty mudrā…" — [The mudrākāntā:] "…having performed the dance movement with the right hand, sitting in daṇḍakāsana, holding the neck and head straight…" — [The karaṃkiṇī:] "Having found a serene place dense with the fragrance of incense, with an inebriate joyful consciousness, anoint yourself with flower garlands; sat on a soft seat, facing east, the body, the head and the neck straight, the chest broad, the neck straight…".

Smooth translation

"Next I shall set forth the highest mudrā — Phetkāriṇī, which grants the fruit of all accomplishments. At the burning-ground, firm in the vow, settle in the middle of the platform and bind the queen-mudrā — at the hour of the strengthened conjunction of the luminaries or in an empty house; under other conditions do not bind: a misbegotten mudrā harms. Sit down, set the left foot at the anus and, keeping your composure, extend the right leg, slightly bent. Bend the arms, press the firm fists against the earlobes; with the face thrown up, emit the wild, fearsome howl of a jackal. With wrath in the eyes, with a wrathful face raise the cruel cry. Thus, with the whole body shuddering, perform the Phetkārī-mudrā — and within two ghaṭikās (about an hour) you will attain the meeting with the yoginīs. Their circle will tremble and, utterly disarrayed, will submit to you, as the circle is subject to Bhairava. Such is Phetkārī, the queen of mudrās: she performs men's works, is rarely attainable in this world and is famed for her binding among all mudrās. When she is imparted from the guru's mouth by the best sādhakas, the hero is to know: this is the last birth; if she has reached his hearing — he is already fit, beyond all doubt". — In the śānti-mudrā section the same idiom of the posture: the sādhaka binds the "mighty mudrā" sitting in svastikāsana. In the mudrākāntā section he sits in daṇḍakāsana — "neck and head straight" — and performs the dance movement with the right hand. In the karaṃkiṇī section there is the full chamber of practice: a serene place dense with incense smoke, a soft seat, facing east; body, head and neck a straight line, chest broad, neck straight.

Notes

- The new e-text: Muktabodha M00681 = Jayadrathayāmala Ṣaṭka 4, keyed from NAK 1-1468 / NGMPP B 122/4 (paper, Newari script, 237/239 fols., AD 1626/7; keyed by Muktabodha, editor Anirban Dash; Revision 0: 09.04.2026). This is the very manuscript Sanderson cites (Sanderson 2009, bibliography). Gap A2 closed 17.10.2026.

- The verse count of Roots of Yoga (“4.2.612–622”): exactly eleven stanzas of the phetkārī vidhi (from “ataḥ paraṃ pravakṣyāmi” to “…yukto na saṃśayaḥ”) — followed by the colophon “iti jayadrathe phetkārīmudrā vidhiḥ” (file : 2317) and a new mudrā (karaṃkiṇī). Paṭala 2 of the ṣaṭka (“mudrākośaḥ dvitīyaḥ paṭalaḥ”, file : 2714) is a thematic compendium of mudrās (lelihāna-, śānti-, māyā-, mudrākāntā-, phetkārī-, karaṃkiṇī-…).
- The Roots of Yoga 6.1.2 translation was checked word by word against the Sanskrit: “Sit down, alert, put the left foot at the anus and extend the right leg, slightly bent, my dear” (615) and “Bend the arms, clench the fists and put them at the earlobes. Look upwards and make the terrifying, horrific howl of a jackal” (616); the mudrā’s name translated as “the howler” — phetkārī = “howling”. Like Roots of Yoga, I skip the dark “dṛkchire madirāmasyā” (they have “[…]”). The authors’ remark about the likeness to the haṭha-yoga mahāmudrā is correct: the same combination “one heel at the perineum — the other leg extended”.
- “Daṇḍakāsana” (mudrākāntā) is a rare living usage of the “daṇḍa/staff” posture from the ancient lists (Pāśupatasūtra 1.16 “daṇḍayāta”, Dharmaputrikā 2.3 “daṇḍa”, the Mataṅga/Kiraṇa parallels, § 6 and § 11.3); here it is simply the working posture for binding the mudrā, with the straight axis “neck-head” (ṛjugrīvaśirasthita), as in the karaṇa formula of the Siddhānta texts (§§ 11–13).
- The setting “samakāya śirodhara” in the karaṃkiṇī (file : 2506) = the same formula “body-neck-head in one line” (cf. ṛjukāya, “samaṃ kāyaśirogrīvam” in the yoga texts); “spaṣṭavakṣo ṛjugrīvo” adds the “broad chest and straight neck”. The practice at the burning-ground (śmaśāna) with a platform (vedi) and vows is the standard entourage of the mudrā-vidhis of this yāmala.

4. Mālinīvijayottara 12.7 — jitāsana (“one who has conquered the posture”). I found this place in my e-text (Muktabodha e-text no. M00160, keyed from the edition: editor śāstrī M.R.; Research Department Jammu and Kashmir State, Srinagar, 1922; line number in that file: 2235) and added it to § 1.2.
5. Mṛgendra, Yogapāda 17–19 with the vṛtti (Roots of Yoga 4.11, Sanderson’s translation) confirms my reading (§ 1.5). In addition Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha has an explanation: the heels protect the scrotum “from the painful pressure that can arise if [the yogin] is jolted upward at the rising of the prāṇa (udghāta)”.
6. Kauṇḍinya — the refined reading (seven names, upasthāñjalika — a single name), see § 7 and § 6a.
7. Vijñānabhairava 78 (Roots of Yoga 9.2.4) — the translation coincides with mine: “on a soft seat, on one buttock, holding the arm and the leg unsupported”.

Useful comparisons (not tantras, but they explain tantric terms) * Pātañjalayogaśāstra-bhāṣya 2.46 and the Vivaraṇa (Roots of Yoga 3.2). The list: padma, vīra, bhadra, svastika, daṇḍa, sopāśraya, paryaṅka, krauñcaniṣadana, hastiniṣadana, uṣṭraniṣadana, samasaṃsthāna, sthitaprasrabdhi, yathāsukha. The Vivaraṇa explains: sopāśraya — with a support “such as a yogic strap or a crutch”; paryaṅka — lying with the arms stretched to the knees. Cf. Kṣemarāja's explanation of Svacchandatantra 7.291: sāpāśraya = "leaning against a wall". * Sthānāṅgasūtra 5.1.396 (Jaina; Roots of Yoga 3.1): the postures of ascetics — standing, squatting (ukkuḍuāsaṇiya ≈ utkuṭuka), "like a statue", vīrāsana, sitting, daṇḍāyata. Cf. daṇḍāyata in Kauṇḍinya and the vīrāsana-tapas in the Bṛhatkālottara and the Ṣaṭsāhasrakālottara.

What Roots of Yoga does not add. For Mataṅga, Parākhya, Kiraṇa and Brahmayāmala the book translates the places on prāṇāyāma, the nāḍīs and dhyāna, but not on postures. Hence not much is to be expected of these texts on postures, apart from Mataṅga Yogapāda 2.23–28 (karaṇa) — that place is not in the book.

11.1. Niśvāsamukha 4.49cd–51 (the ādhyātmika section, the "Śaiva yoga") — ✔ verified against the primary source

Kafle 2015, critical text, pp. 181–182 (the printed Devanagari pagination; PDF line 85–86): > उत्तराभिमुखो भूत्वा बद्धा योगासनन्ततः॥ 4:49॥ > स्वस्तिकं पद्मकं भद्रं त्वर्द्धचन्द्रम्प्रसारितम्। > सापा[3]श्रयमञ्जलिकं योगपट्टं यथासुखम्॥ 4:50॥ > बद्धा योगासनं सम्यगृजुकायस्समाहितः। > जिह्वान्तु तालुके न्यस्य दन्तैर्दन्तान्न संस्पृशेत्॥ 4:51॥

The apparatus (the manuscripts' variant readings after Kafle 2015). How to read: to the left of the "]" stands the reading adopted by the editor, to the right — what supports it or what the manuscripts have. The letters designate the manuscripts (Kafle's sigla): N — the palm-leaf from the National Archives of Nepal (NAK 1-277, microfilm NGMPP A 41/14), Licchavi script, c. AD 850–900; W — the Wellcome Sanskrit manuscript I.33 (London), a copy of 1912 in Devanagari; K — the copy NAK 5-2406, Devanagari (microfilm NGMPP A 159/18), 1925. A combination of letters (NW, NKW) means "so in these manuscripts". "em." is an emendation, i.e. the editor's correction found in no manuscript; "°" — the rest of the word omitted; "—" — lost or illegible letters. * 4:49 yogāsanan tataḥ] NW; yogāsana tataḥ K; * 4:50 sāpāśraya°] em.; — śraya° NKW. In all three manuscripts the beginning of the word is lost; sāpāśraya is the editor's conjecture.

Kafle's translation (pp. 269–270): "Having turned to the north and then assumed a yogic posture [one of the following]: svastika, the lotus posture, bhadra, arddhacandra, prasārita, sāpāśraya, añjalika, yogapaṭṭa — whichever is comfortable [for him], — having properly assumed the yogic posture, with the body straight, concentrated, he should place the tongue on the palate and not let the [upper] teeth touch the [lower]" (49c–51).

In Kafle's edition, note 50 ad 4:50, the Devanagari of Nayasūtra 4:105 (with the misprint "Nayasūtra 1:105") and of Svacchanda 7:290c–291b is given.

Verses with translation: Niśvāsamukha 4.49cd–51: the eight postures and the body's alignment (after Kafle's edition of 2015); Nayasūtra 4.14–15 and 4.105 (after Kafle's quotations)

There is no e-text of the Niśvāsa. The critical edition: Nicolas Kafle, The Niśvāsamukhatantra (PhD, Leiden 2015), pp. 181–182 (PDF pp. 85–86); the verses were checked against the images of the pages. From the apparatus: 4:49 "yogāsanan tataḥ] NW; yogāsana tataḥ K"; 4:50 "sāpāśraya°] em.; — śraya° NKW" — in all three manuscripts the beginning of this word is lost, the editor's reading is a conjecture. Note: the critical text has "baddhā" (not "baddhvā"); in the introduction Kafle himself nevertheless quotes the same line as "baddhvā yogāsanaṃ".

The editor's translation (pp. 269–270): "Having turned to the north and then assumed a yogic posture [one of the following]… slightly closing the eyes" — see below my word-by-word analysis. The Nayasūtra itself is not edited; its verses are given here after Kafle's quotations (note 765; the introduction, note 70; the critical text, note 50 ad 4:50).

Word-by-word gloss

(4.49cd–50) саṃсāра удвигна читтаḥ ту — with a mind fearing the round of existence; саḥ йогӣ парикӣртитаḥ — that one is proclaimed a yogin; уттарāбхимукхаḥ бхӯтвā —

(Nayasūtra 4.14–15) йатра татра стхитаḥ деш́е — wherever he abides in a place; йатра татра āш́раме ратаḥ — wherever he delights in a stage of life; ашṭā санāни мукхйāни кīртитāни самāсатаḥ — eight postures are proclaimed the chief ones, in brief.

(Nayasūtra 4.105) āсанам падмакам баддхвā — having assumed the padmaka posture; свастикам бхадрачандракам — the svastika [or] the “bhadra-wheel”(?); сāпāш́райам йогапаṭṭам — the sāpāśraya [or] the yogapaṭṭa; āсӣнан ча йатхāсукхам — and sitting as [for him] comfortable.

Literal translation

With a mind alarmed at the round of existence, that one is proclaimed a yogin who, having turned to the north, with a yogic posture then — [with the postures]: svastika, padmaka, bhadra, ardhacandra, prasārita, sāpāśraya, añjalika, yogapaṭṭa — in whichever is comfortable [for him].

[Having properly assumed] the yogic posture, [with the alignment] of the straight body, concentrated; and having placed the tongue on the palate, he should not touch the teeth with the teeth.

Wherever he abides in a place, whatever stage of life he delights in: svastika, padmaka, bhadra, ardhacandra, prasārita, sāpāśraya, añjalika, yogapaṭṭa — as [for him] comfortable — eight postures are proclaimed the chief ones, in brief.

Having assumed a posture — padmaka, svastika, bhadracandraka, sāpāśraya, yogapaṭṭa — and sitting as [for him] comfortable.

Smooth translation

That one is proclaimed a yogin who, with a mind averse to the round of existence, having turned to the north, then assumes a yogic posture — whichever of the following is comfortable: svastika, padmaka, bhadra, ardhacandra, prasārita, the supported posture (sāpāśraya), añjalika, yogapaṭṭa.

Having properly assumed the yogic posture, with the body straight, concentrated, let him place the tongue on the palate and not let the teeth touch the teeth.

Wherever the yogin lives and whatever stage of life he enjoys: svastika, padmaka, bhadra, ardhacandra, prasārita, sāpāśraya, añjalika and yogapaṭṭa — as comfortable for him — [such are] the eight postures proclaimed the chief ones.

Let [the yogin] assume padmaka, svastika, bhadracandraka, sāpāśraya or yogapaṭṭa and sit as comfortable for him.

Notes

- The reading “baddhā yogāsanan” of the critical text is grammatically incomplete; in the introduction Kafle, however, has “baddhvā yogāsanaṃ”, which I accept in the translation (“having assumed the yogic posture”). On yathāsukha — see the next note.
- The alignment (the straight body, the tongue on the palate, the teeth not touching) is usual for this tradition: cf. Svacchandatantra 7.290–291 with Kṣemarāja’s commentary, Kālottara 25.17 and 63.8, Mataṅga karaṇa 2.27–28.
- Kafle himself notes (note 765): yathāsukha could be counted as a ninth posture (cf. Yogabhāṣya 2.46), but the text directly speaks of eight postures — “therefore we do not count yathāsukha as a separate posture”.
- In Kafle’s critical text (note 50) the form is different: “āsanaṃ padmakaṃ baddhā svastikaṃ bhadracandrakam | sāpāśrayaṃ yogapaṭṭam āsīnaṃ ca yathāsukham” — with “baddhā” (as in the Niśvāsamukha itself) and an abridged list of five names; in the introduction the form with “baddhvā” is given. The same formula stands in Svacchandatantra 7.290c–291b (translated in the Svacchandatantra block above).

11.2. Nayasūtra 4.14c–15 and 4.105 — (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work) (Sanskrit via Kafle’s quotations)

Status: an open gap (A1). The Sanskrit is restored word for word from Kafle’s notes — this is the limit of open access; the critical text and the apparatus of these verses exist only in Goodall et al. 2015. * 4.14–15 (Kafle, translation, note 765): yatra tatra sthito deśe yatra tatrāśrame rataḥ| svastikaṃ padmakaṃ bhadram arddhacandraṃ prasāritam| sāpāśrayam añjalikaṃ yogapaṭṭaṃ yathāsukham|aṣṭāsanāni mukhyāni kīrtitāni samāsataḥ. In the introduction (p. 35) there stands sāpāśrayaṃ añjalikaṃ — without sandhi. * 4.105 (the introduction, note 70; the critical text, note 50): āsanaṃ padmakaṃ baddhvā svastikaṃ bhadracandrakam| sāpāśrayaṃ yogapaṭṭam āsīnañca yathāsukham. * The translation — Goodall’s in Roots of Yoga 3.3 (see § 10). * The editors’ position on *yathāsukha (Kafle, note 765): it could be counted as a ninth posture (cf. sukhāsana), “but the text directly speaks of eight postures, therefore we do not count yathāsukha as a separate posture”. In the Yogabhāṣya 2.46 yathāsukha is a separate posture. * Kafle, note 762: in all the places of the Niśvāsa the posture looks like sāpāśraya, but the original form is possibly sopāśraya (as in the Yogabhāṣya; cf. the Carakasaṃhitā Sū. 15.11).

11.3. The parallel lists from notes 765 and 766 in Kafle — (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work)

- Kiraṇa 58.4–5: baddhvāsanaṃ yathābhīṣṭaṃ svastikaṃ padmameva vā|ardhacandraṃ ca vīrākhyaṃ yogapaṭṭaṃ prasāritam|paryaṅkaṃ ca yathāsaṃsthamāsanāṣṭakamucyate — eight: svastika, padma, ardhacandra, vīra, yogapaṭṭa, prasārita, paryaṅka, yathāsaṃstha. A new tantra for the catalogue with a list of postures. Now verified ✔ against the primary source from the IFP (the French Institute of Pondicherry) manuscript transcripts T0998 and T0746 (§ 13).

- Parākhya 14.5: padma, svastika, daṇḍa, ardhacandra (after Kafle; cf. Goodall 2004: 348–351).

    - The definition of ardhacandra, Parākhya 14.6c–7b: dviguṇe jānunī kṛtvā pādāv anyonyasaṃgatau|| tadvad bhuvi kṛtāvāse tad bhaved ardhacaṃdrakaṃ — “having bent the knees double, the feet joined to each other, and so placed on the ground — this is ardhacandra”.
    - Cf. the different definitions: Kṣemarāja in the commentary on Svacchandatantra 7.291 (one foot on the ground, the other upturned on the thigh) and Dharmaputrikā 2.15. The descriptions of ardhacandra in the different traditions do not coincide.
- Sarvajñānottara Yogapāda 9 (in Kafle): padmakaṃ svastikaṃ vāpi upasthātyāñjaliṃ tathā|pīṭhārdhamardhacandraṃ vā sarvatobhadrameva vā. In my Muktabodha e-text no. M00327, keyed from a manuscript: IFP/EFEO transcript T00334 from D5550 GOML (the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai), Madras; line numbers in that file: 62–64 (there it is v. 10) the text is badly corrupt: padmakaṃ svāstikaṃ nāpi upasthāpyāṃ jaliṃ tathā |? pīṭhārdhatardhacandraṃ vā karmato? bhadrameva vā. The list is evidently close to Kauṇḍinya’s: padmaka, svastika, upastha-añjali, pīṭha, ardhacandra, sarvatobhadra.

- Makuṭa 11.6cd–7ab: gomukhaṃ svastikañ caiva padmañ caivārddhacandrakam|vīraṃ yogāsanaṃ proktaṃ ṣaḍvidhañ cāsanaṃ kramāt. Coincides with my Makuṭāgama: Muktabodha e-text no. M00036, keyed from the edition: editor swaminattha gurukkal c.; swaminattha gurukkal c., Delhi, 1947; line number in that file: 6322 (§ 2.4).

- Mataṅga Yogapāda 2.13: tataḥ samādhau yogyaḥ syān nānyathā munipuṅgava|paryaṅkaṃ kamalaṃ bhadraṃ svastikaṃ cācalaṃ dṛḍham — paryaṅka, kamala (= padma), bhadra, svastika. Kafle counts acala and dṛḍha as postures (six in all), but by Bhatt’s edition the postures are four (2.12c caturṇām āsanānām), see § 12.

- Mataṅga Yogapāda 2.22c–28 — *karaṇa (note 766). Earlier it was ⚠. > karaṇaṃ ca pravakṣyāmi yathāvat tan nibodha me|| ubhayor jaṅghayor madhye hastāv ānīya tiryagau| kṛtvottānau samau vidvān vāmasyopari dakṣiṇam|| nyaset karaṃ yathāṅgulyo dakṣiṇā vāmamūlataḥ| kiṃcid ākuñcitāṅguṣṭhau kartavyo niyatātmanā|| uraśconnamya vivataṃ [sic, ? vitataṃ] kṛtvā bāhū pariślathau| pṛṣṭham ākuñcayet skandhadeśam unnamayet sudhīḥ|| niṣkampāṃ sudṛḍhām ṛjvīṃ nātistabdhāṃ na kuñcitām| grīvāṃ vidhārayed yatnāc chiraḥ kāryaṃ samaṃ sadā|| dyāvāpṛthivyābhimukho dṛṅ [n]āsāgrasamāśrayā| kiṃcit sammīlayen netre dantair dantān na saṃspṛśet|| tālumadhyagatenaiva jihvāgreṇa mahāmune| karaṇaṃ yogamārgoktaṃ yathāvat parivistarāt||

  My translation (working): “The karaṇa as well I shall set forth as it should be — heed me. The knowing one, having laid both hands across between the shins, palms up, evenly, let him lay the right [palm] upon the left one so that the fingers of the right [lie] at the root of the left; the self-controlled one bends the thumbs slightly. Having raised the chest and unfolded it(?), relaxed the arms, let the wise one draw in the back and raise the region of the shoulders. Let him keep the neck with care immobile, very firm, straight, not overly tense and not bent; the head always held level. Face turned to sky and earth(?) [i.e. neither up nor down], with the gaze resting on the tip of the nose, let him slightly close the eyes; he does not touch the teeth with the teeth, with the tip of the tongue placed in the middle of the palate, O great sage — [such is] the karaṇa, set forth on the path of yoga in detail”.

  This is the most detailed description of the upper-body posture (karaṇa) in an early tantra.

  - Kafle gives parallels: Sarvajñānottara Yogapāda 250–251; Svacchanda 4.365–367 (verified, § 1.1); Uttarakāmika 23.209–210; Bṛhatkālottara (manuscript A 43/1, folio 13v); Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati (Yogapāda) 3, p. 185 and others; Tāntrikābhidhānakośa, vol. 2, the entry karaṇa.
  - One more parallel: Skandapurāṇa 179.40cd — tālau jihvāṃ samādhāya dantair dantān na ca spṛśan.
- Pāśupatasūtra 1.16 / Kauṇḍinya: after Kafle eight postures (upastha separate from añjalika), after Mallinson & Singleton seven. See § 7.

11.4. The check of the text on Nayasūtra 4 sent by the user

The user sent a text presented as an excerpt from Goodall et al. 2015: the Devanagari of 4.11–18, an apparatus, “Goodall’s translation”, notes and a survey of the chapter. The source of the text is not indicated. I do not have the 2015 volume itself, so I checked everything that can be compared with independent sources.

Confirmed * The Sanskrit of 4.14c–15 coincides with Kafle’s quotations, and 4.105 — with note 70 and note 50 in Kafle. * The references to the Svacchanda are genuine: Kṣemarāja’s explanation citprakāśavyatiriktaṃ na kiñcid api kadāpy astīti pratyabhijānīyāt (Svacchandatantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00091; by the file header, the etext was obtained by the Muktabodha programs from a computer input in Devanagari prepared by Dr S. Malaviya (S. Malaviya); line number in that file: 48868) and turyadvāraṃ turyānubhavapradhānaṃ brahmarandhram (ad Svacchandatantra 4.449, Muktabodha M00091, file lines 14993–14994) are verbatim correct. * The references to Kiraṇa 58.4–5 and Goodall 2004: 348–351 agree with Kafle's notes (Goodall 2004: 349 n.725; 350 n.728). * The parallel Niśvāsamukha 4.51 (the tongue and the teeth) is confirmed by the edition. * The Sanskrit of 4.104 and 4.106 (not verified) corresponds in sense to Goodall's translation in Roots of Yoga.

Inaccurate or contradicting the sources 1. "Niśvāsamukha 4:49c–50b" — by Kafle's edition the list occupies the whole of 4:50, and 4:49cd is an introductory line. 2. "In manuscript N in both monuments sāyāśrayam is written" — false for the Niśvāsamukha: there, all three manuscripts have a lacuna (— śraya°), sāpāśraya is an emendation. Kafle (note 762) writes that in all the places of the Niśvāsa the posture looks like sāpāśraya. Hence the reading "sāyāśrayaṃ N" for Nayasūtra 4.15 is doubtful as well. The whole sent "apparatus" (incl. "māyātrayaṃ T", "eṣā—[4]–dhvā N") I consider unverified. 3. The quotation from Svacchandatantra 12.165c–166b is distorted. The text has: sukhāsīnaḥ … svacchandaṃ samanusmṛtya (not sukhāsanaḥ … svacchandan tu anusmṛtya). The main thing is omitted: Svacchandatantra 12.165ab repeats verbatim Nayasūtra 4.14ab (yatra tatra sthito deśe…). 4. "Skandapurāṇa 181:40cd … aspṛśan" — in Kafle 179.40cd, dantair dantān na ca spṛśan. 5. "Goodall's translation" does not coincide with Goodall's translation as quoted by Mallinson & Singleton with reference to Goodall et al. 2015: 466 ("lucky mark… supported… joined-hands… yoga belt ([or one that is] comfortable): these eight principal postures have been proclaimed in brief"). The sent English version ("back-rest-assisted", "seated positions [for meditation]") is, apparently, a paraphrase, not a quotation. The page numbers (468–470; 216–217) are not confirmed: in Mallinson & Singleton the translation of 4.14 is on p. 466. 6. Section 7 ("the semantic significance of the 8 āsanas") — not the edition's data, but a reconstruction, in places contradicting the sources: * añjalika in Dharmaputrikā 2.14 is kneeling with the palms at the heart, not "the feet pressed together"; * ardhacandra after Parākhya 14.6c–7b and after Kṣemarāja is different; * bhadra in Kṣemarāja is samapādasthityā ("the feet level"). This section cannot be used. 7. Section 8 (the chapter's structure) — not verified: * "161 verses"; * the colophon Paramāmṛtasadbhāvavicāraḥ; * the "yoga of ten stages" and the like. For the Niśvāsamukha Kafle (note 756) describes a six-limbed (ṣaḍaṅga) Śaiva yoga without āsana among the limbs. These data cannot be cited as fact.

The result for the catalogue. The Sanskrit of Nayasūtra 4.14c–15 and 4.105 is now confirmed by two independent quotations from scholarly editions (Kafle; Goodall in Mallinson & Singleton's translation) — the status (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work). Niśvāsamukha 4.49–51 is verified against the page of the edition — ✔ verified against the primary source. The rest of the sent text is not used as a source.

"Having painstakingly mastered one of the four postures, only then does [the yogin] become fit for samādhi, not otherwise, O best of sages. First of all, as prescribed, having assumed immovably and firmly paryaṅka, kamala, bhadra or svastika and performed the flawless karaṇa, let him conquer the prāṇas: by victory over them the world is conquered".

acalaṃ dṛḍham — adverbs or qualifiers, not the names of postures: the text itself speaks of four postures, and the svastika is called "the fourth" (2.22a). Kafle (§ 11.3) counts six, and this is incorrect. The variant of 2.13d: cārdhacandrakam in manuscript ओ (instead of cācalaṃ dṛḍham).

- paryaṅka (2.15–17b): paryaṅkaṃ yogapaṭṭena badhnīyāt pṛṣṭhayogataḥ | ākuñcya jānunī samyak pādaṃ kṛtvā tu dakṣiṇam || bāhyato vāmajaṅghāyā vāmaṃ savyordhvato bahiḥ | kiṃcid vinirgataṃ kṛtvā tiṣṭhed unnāmya vai kaṭim || paryaṅkam iti vikhyātam āsanaṃ yogasiddhidam | — "The paryaṅka is to be bound with the yogic strap (yogapaṭṭa) encompassing the back. Having bent the knees well, the right foot placed outside the left shin, and the left one above the right(?), outside, slightly protruding; sit with the loins slightly raised. This is the posture known as paryaṅka, which gives success in yoga". This is the first description of a posture bound with a yogapaṭṭa that I have found in the Mantramārga, not a mere name.

Context: this is chapter 2 of the Yogapāda (yogāṅga). In 2.13 the text names only four postures — paryaṅka, kamala, bhadra, svastika — and separately gives the adverbs acalam dṛḍham ("immovably-firmly"): these are not a 5th and a 6th posture, but an indicator of how the posture is to be held. The competing reading (by Nicolas Kafle in the 2015 dissertation, § 11.3) understands acalam and dṛḍham as the names of two additional postures; the edition contradicts this.

Literal translation

Mastering one of [the postures] four, painstakingly, O best of sages, then you will be fit for concentration, not otherwise. The paryaṅka, the lotus, the auspicious or the svastika — immovably and firmly — first having assumed as prescribed and having made also the flawless body-setting, let him conquer by rule [his] prāṇas; by that very victory the world is conquered.

The paryaṅka is to be bound with a yogapaṭṭa, [going] through a joining with the back; both knees well bent; the right foot placed outside the left shin, and the left one above the right, on top, slightly protruding; let him sit, the loins raised. This is the posture called paryaṅka, which gives success in yoga.

Having sat with concentration on even pleasant ground: the left foot, entered upon the right thigh, and the right, arranged on the left thigh, having intertwined, and those (both) shins with each other; this verily is the best posture in the prescription, called "the lotus".

Bhadra is arranged like paryaṅka, only having fixed both shins and placed [the hands] upon the feet; this is proclaimed bhadra. Having drawn in the left foot, brought its heel to the buttock and thus placed [it] under the right one, the knee on the ground; having made the left [leg] the upper one, the right foot placed pressed by the left shin and thigh; the fourth posture, known under the name svastika.

“Tiryañcau” would be correct, but the metre breaks; “tiryagau” is a usage in the spirit of the ancient sages (ārṣa).

Both ankles placed below the scrotum, at the sides of the perineal seam, the sides of the feet firmly grasped with both hands and being utterly motionless; this is the auspicious posture, destroying all diseases.

Smooth translation

Having painstakingly mastered one of the four postures — the paryaṅka, the lotus, the auspicious or the svastika — holding it immovably and firmly and first performing flawlessly the setting of the body, the yogin becomes fit for concentration; by victory over the prāṇas the world is conquered.

For the paryaṅka the body is bound with the yogic strap (yogapaṭṭa) encompassing the back. Both knees are bent, the right foot is placed outside the left shin, and the left one above the right, slightly protruding on top. One is to sit with the pelvic region slightly raised. Such is the paryaṅka, which brings perfection in yoga.

On even, pleasant ground the yogin sits, having concentrated the mind: the left foot on the right thigh, the right on the left, both shins intertwined with each other. This is the best posture of this doctrine, called the lotus.

The auspicious posture is arranged like the paryaṅka, but with the difference that, the shins fixed, the palms are laid upon the feet. Having bent the left leg, its heel is drawn to the buttock and placed under the right one so that the knee comes to the ground; the left foot is laid on top, pressed against the right shin and thigh. Such is the fourth posture, called the svastika.

The editor explains that the grammatically correct form would be “tiryañcau”, but under it the metre breaks; the form “tiryagau” is an archaism admissible in the Sanskrit tradition.

The bhadra that destroys all diseases is this: the ankles are brought under the perineum on both sides of its seam, the insteps of the feet are firmly grasped by the palms, and the whole posture is held in complete stillness.

Notes

- I understand acalam dṛḍham as adverbs — “immovably and firmly” — because the same verse speaks of four postures, and the svastika below is called “the fourth” (2.22a). The competing opinion is Kafle’s (§ 11.3), who counts these words as the names of postures; Bhatt’s edition contradicts him.
- The reading pūṣpāyoga (“the floral combination”) in Bhatt looks like a misprint; the reading pṛṣṭhayogataḥ (“in joining with the back”) is confirmed by manuscript ओ and alone agrees with the physiology of the posture (the strap fixes the knees from the back's side). The variant of 2.16cd: sāṃniṣṭhānyā vai kaṭiḥ (the variant of manuscript छ, see below); the rest of the verse is restored as "āsanaṃ yogasiddhidam" by the common formula of the four postures.

- For the paryaṅka this is, to my knowledge, the first description in the Śaiva Mantramārga of a posture bound with a strap — not a mere mention (there is one also in Yoga Sūtra 2.46), but a recipe of execution.

- The word samāviddhya ("having intertwined") answers the verb of 2.14ab (baddhvā), so "to bind the posture" here means not girding with a cloth but bringing the limbs together; in kamala it is a gesture of the legs without a strap. The variant samāvindhya (manuscript ख).

- The svastika is called "the fourth" (caturtham), which finally excludes acala and dṛḍha as independent postures. In bhadra the expression pādayor upari sthāpya — "having placed upon the feet" — by itself does not specify what exactly is laid on the feet; the parallel in the Yogasūtrabhāṣyavivaraṇa 2.46 (see Bhatt's note on this place) gives pāṇikañcipikāṃ kuryāt — "a binding is made with the palms", which is adopted in the translation. The description of the modern bhadra (the soles together at the perineum) is not in Mataṅga — it is taken from Śāṇḍilyopaniṣad 1.3.8 (see below).

- This note of the edition shows the degree of its care: the departure from the Pāṇinian norm is explained as a conscious textual choice.

- The quotation from the Śāṇḍilyopaniṣad is given by Bhatt in a note on 2.20ab as a parallel to bhadra; Mataṅga itself does not contain this technique (the soles together at the perineum). Note the construction pādapārśvaṃ … pāṇibhyāṃ dṛḍhaṃ baddhvā ("having firmly grasped the sides of the feet with the hands"): it indirectly confirms that in Mataṅga's bhadra too the palms are laid upon the feet.

- kamala (2.17c–18): bhūpṛṣṭhe susame ramye viniveśya samādhinā || dakṣiṇorugataṃ vāmaṃ pādaṃ vāmorusaṃsthitam | dakṣiṇaṃ tu samāviddhya tajjaṅghe tu parasparam || etad dhi kamalaṃ nāma vidhāv āsanam uttamam | — "Having sat with concentration on even pleasant ground: the left foot on the right thigh, the right on the left, the shins intertwined with each other. This is kamala, the best posture in [this] prescription".

- bhadra (2.19cd–20b): paryaṅkavat sthitaṃ bhadraṃ kiṃ tu jaṅghe niyamya tu || pādayor upari sthāpya bhadram etat prakīrtitam | — "Bhadra is arranged like paryaṅka, but, the shins fixed and [them/the hands?] placed upon the feet — this is called bhadra". Note: the description "the soles together at the perineum" is taken not from Mataṅga, but from the parallels in Bhatt's notes: Śāṇḍilyopaniṣad 1.3.8 and the Yogasūtrabhāṣyavivaraṇa 2.46.

- svastika (2.20c–22b): saṃkocya vāmapādaṃ tu tatpārṣṇiṃ tu sphigavadhim || kṛtvādho dakṣiṇasyetthaṃ dharaṇyāṃ jānumaṇḍalam | savyaṃ kṛtvottaraṃ

pādaṃ vāmajaṅghorupīḍitam || svastikaṃ nāma vikhyātaṃ caturtham idam āsanam | — “Having bent the left leg, [brought] its heel up to the buttock and so [placed] under the right one, the knee on the ground; having laid the other foot on top, clamped by the left shin and thigh — this is known as svastika, the fourth posture” (the translation here and there conjectural).

The translation — in § 11.3. Refinements after the edition: * 2.24d: kartavyau — dual, “both thumbs”; Kafle has kartavyo, which is the reading of manuscript ओ. * 2.25a: vitataṃ (“having spread [the chest]”); Kafle has the misprint vivataṃ. * 2.29: “When [the yogin] has thus from the very beginning duly settled in the completely immobile karaṇa, then prāṇāyāma is set forth”.

12.3. The parallels in Bhatt’s notes (pp. 253–255)

These are new places for the catalogue; (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work) — via the quotation in Bhatt. * Kiraṇa, Yogapāda 1.4–5 (= Kiraṇa 58.4–5 in Kafle) — the list of eight postures (§ 11.3). * Kiraṇa Yogapāda 1.6 — svastika: dviguṇaṃ pṛṣṭhato nītvā vāmapādaṃ tu dakṣiṇam | tiryaksthaṃ dviguṇaṃ kṛtvā jaṅghālagnaṃ ca svastikam (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work). * Kiraṇa Yogapāda 1.7 — padma: nyased dviguṇam anyonyaṃ pādam ekaṃ tathetaram | padmam evaṃ samākhyātaṃ (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work). * Both quotations of Bhatt are confirmed by the IFP transcripts (§ 13). * Suprabheda Yogapāda 3.57–58 and 3.60 — coincide with my M00090 (§ 2.3). * Mṛgendra Yogapāda 18c–19 — coincides with § 1.5. * Yogasāra, p. 168 — the same verse as Svacchanda 4.365–367, but in the recension dantapaṅktis tathaiveha dṛk cādhordhvavivarjitā. In the Svacchandatantra (GRETIL) — dantapaṅktī tathaiveha dṛṣṭiścādhordhvavarjitā. Bhatt himself calls the Yogasāra the source; the identification with the Svacchandatantra is mine (§ 1.1). * Agnipurāṇa (in the scan the number reads as “७३३.३–६”, probably 373.3–6; a Purāṇa, not a tantra): samakāyaśirogrīvaṃ dhārayann acalaṃ sthiraḥ | saṃprekṣya nāsikāgraṃ svaṃ diśaś cānavalokayan (= Bhagavadgītā 6.13) … dakṣiṇaṃ karapṛṣṭhaṃ ca nyased vāmatalopari. * Kūrmapurāṇa II.11.46 (svastika), Śāṇḍilya Up. 1.3.8 (bhadra), Yogaśikhā Up. 180, Yogasūtrabhāṣyavivaraṇa 2.46 (bhadra, paryaṅka) — not tantras.

12.4. Other mentions of postures in Mataṅga's Yogapāda (by OCR, not checked against the scan)

- Yogapāda 3.2: tatra yogāsanaṃ baddhvā sthiram ekāgramānasaḥ (the textual layer of the Bhatt 1982 scan on archive.org — the file "_djvu.txt", line 42782; not checked against the scan page).
- Yogapāda 7.22: pūrvoktam āsanaṃ baddhvā dhāraṇāṃ dhārayet kramāt (the textual layer of the Bhatt 1982 scan on archive.org — the file "_djvu.txt", line 48519; not checked against the scan page).

12.5. The check of the second sent text (on Mataṅga)

Correct: * the text of 2.13cd–14 and 2.29; * the four postures (paryaṅka, kamala, bhadra, svastika) and acalaṃ dṛḍham as qualifiers; * the note on tiryagau; * most of the variant readings; * the data on the commentary (up to Kriyāpāda 11.12b/13); * the titles of chapters 3, 4, 6 and 7; the six limbs of yoga; * the parallels from the Agnipurāṇa and Mṛgendra; * the descriptions of paryaṅka and kamala.

Incorrect or not confirmed by the edition: 1. Devanagari 2.26b sudṛḍhām ūrdhvāṃ — the edition has sudṛḍhām ṛjvīṃ. In the sent text's own "analysis" there stands ṛjvī, i.e. the text contradicts itself. 2. 2.25c pṛṣṭham ākuñcayed ucca-skandhadeśam — the edition has no ucca, and with it the line does not fit the metre (metrically wrong). 3. 2.26d śiraḥ-kāyaṃ — the edition has śiraḥ kāryaṃ ("the head is to be held level"). Besides, in the sent IAST there is vidhārayet prayatnāc, and in the Devanagari vidhārayed yatnāc. 4. 2.27c and 2.28c: the sent text's IAST and Devanagari disagree with each other (saṃmīlayen/saṃmīlayan, yogamārgotthaṃ/yogamārgoktaṃ). The edition has saṃmīlayen, yogamārgoktaṃ; yogamārgotthaṃ is the variant of manuscript च. 5. 2.23b vidvāṃ — the edition has vidvān. 6. The sigla "k, k₁, g…" — no such system in editions: they have ओ, ख, घ, च, छ, ज. The variant "tiryagau" is ascribed to "2.22d", whereas it is 2.23b. 7. "Bhatt's notes" with the Niśvāsa Nayasūtra 4.106 and Skandapurāṇa 181.40cd — on these pages of the edition they are not there. And it is impossible: the Niśvāsa edition came out in 2015, and the critical edition of the old Skandapurāṇa began appearing in 1998 (Bhatt wrote in 1982). 8. The quotation "Svacchandatantra 4.365c–367b (cited after the Yogasāra)" — Bhatt has only "Yogasāra, p. 168", no Svacchanda. 9. bhadra "the soles together at the perineum, the knees apart" — this is not in Mataṅga's text. 2.19 says only: "like paryaṅka, but the shins fixed…". The description is taken from the parallels in the notes. 10. The chapter titles: 1 — yogopanyāsa, not "Yogalakṣaṇa"; 2 — yogāṅga, not "Ṣaḍaṅga-prakaraṇa"; 5 — śivatattvopalabdhi, not "-prāpti". 11. The "anatomical analysis" (on the temporo-mandibular joint, the vagus nerve, the "bhairava-mudrā", the "nabho-mudrā/khecarī") — modern interpretation, has nothing to do with the text.

Result: the sent text is based on the genuine edition but contains distortions of the Sanskrit, invented "editor's notes" and other texts' descriptions of postures. Hence only what I have checked against the scan entered the catalogue.

13. Kiraṇa, Yogapāda, ch. 58 (yogābhyāsavidhi) — from two IFP (the French Institute of Pondicherry) manuscript transcripts ✔ verified against the primary source

Sources. Both copies are handwritten Devanagari, with no text layer; I read the images of the pages. * T0998 (IFP; on the card: “copied from a ms with no Re. 39302”), pp. 183–185. * T0746 (IFP; the note “R5325” in the margin), pp. 133–134.

The scans lie in `texts_extra/kirana/scans/`. The transcription is mine, diplomatic. The scribes’ errors are not corrected; [?] marks an uncertain reading, “…” — a lacuna in the manuscript.

The chapter numbering. * T0998 p. 183, colophon: iti śrīmat kiraṇākhye mahātantre caryāpāde saptapañcāśat paṭalaḥ | caryāpādaḥ samāptaḥ. * T0746 p. 133: yogapāde aṣṭapañcāśatpaṭalaḥ. Hence ch. 58 is the first chapter of the Yogapāda (= “YP 1” in Bhatt). * T0998, the end of the manuscript (p. 205): … yogapāde mātṛkānyāsādi catuḥṣaṣṭiḥ paṭalaḥ | yogapādaḥ samāptaḥ. Sixty-four chapters in all, the Yogapāda = chs. 58–64. * The T0746 table of contents gives Yogapāda 58–63: 58 yogābhyāsavidhi, 59 kālotkrānti-lakṣaṇa, 60 antyeṣṭi, 61 ekoddiṣṭa (with the subsections śaivaśrāddha, pañcabrahmoddhāra), 62 liṅgoddhāra, 63 mātṛkānyāsa. The discrepancy 63/64 is explained by a different splitting of ch. 61.

13.1. The text (T0746 pp. 133–134; the variants of T0998 pp. 184–185)

> garuḍaḥ — yogābhyāsaṃ samācakṣva tadabhyāse phalaṃ tu kim | kasmin kārye[?] kathaṃ yogo kair aṅgair āsanais tu kim || īśvaraḥ (T0998: bhagavān) — yogāt siddhiś ca mokṣaś ca … śṛṇu khaga | ṣaḍaṅgaḥ sa ca boddhavyas tasyāṅgāni śṛṇuṣva tu || pratyāhāras tathā dhyānaṃ prāṇāyāmo ’tha dhāraṇam | āsanaṃ ca samādhiś ca yogāṅgāni sthitāni[?] ṣaṭ[?] || gṛhe vāpi śivasthāne yogī yogaṃ samārabhet | baddhvāsanaṃ yathābhīṣṭaṃ svastikaṃ padmam eva vā || ardhacandraṃ ca vīrākhyaṃ yogapaṭṭaṃ prasāritam (T0998: yogapaṭṭaprasāritam) | paryaṅgaṃ ca yathāsaṃsthaṃ … mānāṣṭam ucyate (T0998: yathā saṃstha mānāṣṭam ucyate, without the lacuna) ||

13.2. What has been established

- Eight postures: svastika, padma, ardhacandra, vīra, yogapaṭṭa, prasārita, paryaṅka, yathāsaṃstha. This coincides with Kafle's quotation (“Kiraṇa 58.4–5”) and with Bhatt's parallels (Yogapāda 1.6 svastika, 1.7 padma). The status changes from (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work) to ✔ verified against the primary source.

Verses with translation: Kiraṇa, Yogapāda, ch. 58 (yogābhyāsavidhi): the eight postures

There is neither a printed edition nor an e-text of this chapter; there are two manuscript copies from the library of the French Institute of Pondicherry (IFP), both handwritten Devanagari with no text layer: transcript T0746 (the shelf-note R5325), pp. 133–134, and transcript T0998, pp. 183–185 (their scans lie in the project's working folder: `texts_extra/kirana/scans/`). Below is my diplomatic transcription chiefly after T0746, the more legible one; the scribe's errors are not corrected, the illegible places are marked with an ellipsis “…”, and uncertain readings with a “(?)” after the word. The variants of T0998 and the parallels from the Mataṅga edition (1982) are given in the notes.

Chapter 58 is the first chapter of the Yogapāda: the colophon on the neighbouring page reads “yogapāde aṣṭapañcāśat paṭalaḥ” (“the 58th chapter in the Yogapāda”), and the previous, 57th, ends the Caryāpāda. It is this chapter, “Kiraṇa 58”, that N. Kafle refers to in the 2015 dissertation (§ 11.3). The verse numbers are assigned by a count of the copy's lines and are therefore approximate; the manuscript's division into verses does not coincide with the numbering system of printed editions.

Word-by-word gloss

(58.1–2 — the opening dialogue) йогāбхйāсам — the practice of yoga; самāчакшва — set forth in full; тат абхйāсе — at its practice; пхалам — the fruit; ту ким — and what; касмин — on what; кāрйе — is to be done; катхам — how; йогаḥ — yoga; каиḥ анґаиḥ — with which limbs; āсанаиḥ — postures; ту ким — and what; йогāт — from yoga; сиддхиḥ ча мокшаḥ ча — both perfection and liberation; тена — thereby; кхага — O sky-roamer (Garuda); шаданґаḥ — six-limbed; саḥ ча — and she; боддхавйаḥ — is to be known; тасйа анґāни — her limbs; ш́р̣нушва — hear; ту — indeed.

(58.3 — the limbs of yoga) пратйāхāраḥ — retraction of the senses; татхā дхйāнам — also contemplation; прāн̣āйāмаḥ — mastery of the breath; атха дхāраṇам — then retention; āсанам ча — and the posture; самāдхиḥ ча — and concentration; йога-анґāни — the limbs of yoga; стхитāни — are arranged; шаṭ — six.

(58.4ab) гр̣хе вā апи — even if at home; ш́ива-стхāне — in Śiva's place; йогī — the yogin; йогам самāрабхет — let him begin yoga.

(58.4cd–5ab) баддхвā — having assumed; āсанам — a posture; йатхā абхӣшṭам — whichever he desires; свастикам — svastika; падмам ева вā — or the lotus; ардхачандрам ча — and the half-moon; вӣра-ākхйам — called the "hero"; йогапаṭṭам — the yogic band; прасāритам — the extended one; парйанкам ча — and the paryaṅka; йатхāсаṃстхам — as [comfortable]; (āса)нāшṭам учйате — is called the eightfold [set of postures].

(svastika) двигуṇам — folded double; пршṭхатаḥ нӣтвā — having brought backward; вāмапāдам — the left foot; ту — and; дакшиṇам — the right one; татсйаṃ — [damaged; presumably: "standing crosswise", tiryakstham]; двигуṇам кр̣твā — having made folded double; джаńгхā-лагнам ча — and clinging to the shin; свастикам — svastika.

(padma) нйасет — let him place; двигуṇам — folded double; адйонйам — [sic for anyonyam — mutually]; пāдам екам — one foot; татхā итарам — so [and] the other; падмам евам самāкхйātам — thus is described the lotus; ардхачандрам ш́р̣нушва тат — and the half-moon — hear it.

(ardhacandra) ардхачандрам бхавет евам — such will be the half-moon; вӣрāсанам ш́р̣нушва ча — and hear of the "hero".

(vīra) двигуṇам — folded double; патитам — [lowered?]; пāдам — the foot; вāмам дакшиṇатаḫ — the left one from the right; ардхатаḫ — to the half; кр̣твā анйонйа тала спарш́ам — having made the soles touch each other; ту — indeed; вӣрам — the “hero”; паṭ̣ṭам атха учйате — and the band is set forth next.

(yogapaṭṭa) кр̣твā двау двигуṇау пāдау — having made both feet folded double; тирйак — crosswise; ӯрдхва — upward; нйасет — let him place; пāṇим — the hand; йатхā — as; ш́лишṭа анг̇улӣйакау — with the fingers closely pressed to one another.

(prasārita) пāдадвайам — both feet; прайāта аграм — [going] to the end (?); сумукхам — [with the “face” upward?]; супрасāритам — well extended; прасāрйа — having extended; чараṇадвайам — both legs.

(paryaṅka, yathāsaṃstha) парйаṅкам — the paryaṅka; тат самāкхйāтам — is thus described; йатхāсаṃстхам — “as it sits”; йатхāстхитиḫ — as [for one] accustomed to sit.

(the hands in the posture) хасте хастаталам кр̣твā — having placed palm on palm; вāмахастасйа дакшиṇам — the right one on the left; вāмаджāну самāйуктам — conjoined with the left knee; дакшиṇам вāмаке нйасет — the right one let him place on the left one; аñджалим вā — or the [folded boat-wise] palms.

Literal translation

“Set forth in full the practice of yoga; what fruit does its practice yield? On what is one [to sit], what is yoga, with which limbs, and what about the postures?” — “From yoga come both perfection and liberation; thereby …[illegible], O sky-roamer. And she is six-limbed; hear her limbs”.

Retraction of the senses, and contemplation, mastery of the breath, then retention, and the posture, and concentration — the six limbs of yoga.

Even if at home — in Śiva’s place — let the yogin begin yoga.

Having assumed a posture — whichever he desires: the svastika or the lotus, the half-moon, the one called the “hero”, the yogic band, the extended one, the paryaṅka or the “as [for one] it sits” — [such] is called the eightfold [set of postures].

Having brought backward the left and the right foot, folded double, having made [the right one] folded double, … [the reading is damaged], clinging to the shin — the svastika.

Let him place the folded-double [feet] mutually, one so and the other; thus is described the lotus. Hear of the half-moon.

… [the description of the half-moon is damaged] …; such will be the half-moon. And hear of the “hero”.

The left foot, folded double, [lowered?] from the right side to the half [of the leg] (?), and the soles having been made to touch each other — the “hero”. And the band is set forth next.

Having made both feet folded double, crosswise and upward …[two or three syllables damaged]; let him place the hand as …[illegible], then — with the fingers closely pressed (?).

Both feet, [going] to the end (?), with the [face upward?] (?), well extended — …[a half-verse damaged], having extended both legs.

The paryaṅka is thus described. “As [for one] it sits” — as [for one] accustomed to sit.

Having placed palm on palm, the right one on the left; …[a half-verse damaged], conjoined with the left knee, the right one let him place on the left one; or the añjali …[damaged].

Smooth translation

Garuda asks: “Tell me in detail about the practice of yoga: what fruit does it yield, on what is one to sit, what is yoga, of which limbs does it consist, and what is to be done with the postures?” Īśvara replies: “From yoga come both perfection and liberation… [part of the line illegible in both copies], O Garuda. She is six-limbed; hear her limbs”.

The limbs of yoga are six: retraction of the senses (pratyāhāra), contemplation (dhyāna), mastery of the breath (prāṇāyāma), retention (dhāraṇā), the posture (āsana) and concentration (samādhi).

Let the yogin begin the practice of yoga at home or in Śiva’s shrine.

The yogin assumes the posture that pleases him: the svastika or the lotus, the half-moon or the “hero”, the yogic band or the extended one, the paryaṅka or the free sitting (“as it sits”); such is called the eightfold set of postures.

The left and the right foot, folded double, are brought backward; the right one, folded double and [standing crosswise(?) — the word is damaged], is pressed against the shin — such is the svastika.

Both feet, folded double, are laid mutually one upon the other — thus is described the lotus. Now hear of the half-moon.

The description of the half-moon is damaged in both copies so that the literal sense cannot be restored; there follows the line: “such will be the half-moon. Now hear of the ‘hero’ posture”.

Having bent the left foot double, it is placed from the right(?), so that the two soles touch each other — this is the “hero”. Next the yogic band is set forth.

Both feet are bent double, crosswise and upward [the end of the half-verse damaged in both copies]; the hand is placed as …[illegible], with the fingers tightly drawn together.

Both feet are well stretched forward(?) — …[a half-verse damaged], both legs extended — such is the “extended one”.

The paryaṅka is described thus. And the “as it sits” posture is simply an accustomed, comfortable sitting.

The hands in the posture: palm upon palm, the right on the left; further partly damaged — the palm is conjoined with the left knee, the right one is placed on the left one; or the añjali (the boat-folded palms)…

Notes

- In transcript T0998 the speaker is called “bhagavān”. The end of 58.2ab is damaged in both copies; in sense there is the promise to explain (“now I will explain, listen”).
- Note: the posture enters the six limbs of yoga in the Kiraṇa, whereas tarka (reasoning) is not among them. By this the composition of the limbs in the Kiraṇa differs from the six-limbed yoga with tarka (as in the Niśvāsa).
- In copy T0746 this line is damaged (a lacuna in the middle, then “…mānāṣṭam ucyate”), in T0998 it is “yathāsaṃstha mānāṣṭam ucyate” without a lacuna. The restoration “(āsa)nāṣṭakam ucyate” rests on the numbering — exactly eight postures are described below — and on the form in Kafle (“yathāsaṃstham āsanāṣṭakam ucyate”, § 11.3). The word “eightfold” is damaged in both copies.
- The disputable word reads in the copy as “tatsyaṃ”; the parallel adduced by Bhatt in the Mataṅga edition of 1982 (Yogapāda 1.6): “dviguṇaṃ pṛṣṭhato nītvā vāmapādaṃ tu dakṣiṇam | tiryakstthaṃ dviguṇaṃ kṛtvā jaṅghālagnaṃ ca svastikam” — “tiryakstham” (“standing crosswise”), which is adopted in the translation. In T0998 the corresponding place is a lacuna.
- Bhatt (Mataṅga, note on Yogapāda 2.–) quotes this as “Kiraṇa Yogapāda 1.7”: “nyased dviguṇam anyonyaṃ pādam ekaṃ tathetaram | padmam evaṃ samākhyātam”. In copy T0746 the scribe wrote “adyonyam” — a plain error for “anyonyam”, which is confirmed by Bhatt’s parallel. In T0998 — “padmakaṃ samākhyātaṃ”.
- Copy T0746: “tatadvā(?) pādatraṃ(?) kṛtvā svaralo(?) lonya(?) saṃsthitam(?)”; T0998: “tadvat pādadvayaṃ … svaralolānya(?)sāritam(?)” — equally damaged. Apparently it is about the two feet placed “as in the previous one”. The precise technique remains unknown.
- T0746 writes the end of the line solidly: “vīrapaṭṭam athocyate”; T0998: “vīrapadam athocyate” — both copies damaged; the division is placed by me. This description of the “hero” (the touching feet) does not coincide with the quotation on vīrāsana in the commentary on the Somaśambhupaddhati (“vīrākhyaṃ tac chṛṇuṣvetat | dakṣiṇañ cordhvata sthitvā vāmapādatalasthitaṃ” — “standing with the right [leg] on top, the left placed under its sole”); presumably there it is another redaction or an inexact quotation.

- Copy T0746 is readable only fragmentarily here; from T0998 one would expect “ūrdhvagatau khaga” (the end of the usual formula “athwart and upward, O Garuda”). The word “yogapaṭṭa” shows that the posture implies a band; judging by the surviving words — the legs are bent, the knees raised, the hand lies like a strap (?). The description CANNOT be fully restored from the copies.
- As is visible already from the surviving second half of the verse, here the legs are simply stretched forward; the first half-verse is legible only fragmentarily.
- The paryaṅka, by the line, is already “thus described” — but its separate description above is absent in the copy (a lost line is possible). Yathāsaṃstha (“as it sits”) is the eighth posture of the list: sitting in any convenient position. In T0998: “paryaṅkaṃ samākhyātaṃ yathāsaṃsthaṃ yathākṛtiḥ(?)”.
- After this the chapter has pratyāhāra, prāṇāyāma (pūraka, kumbhaka, recaka) and dhāraṇā. There are no further concrete instructions on postures.
- All eight are described, though some places are damaged in both copies. Definitely legible:
    - svastika — the left/right foot, folded double, is brought backward and pressed against the shin (jaṅghālagna);
    - padma — both feet are laid mutually (anyonyam) one upon the other;
    - vīra — the soles touch each other (anyonyatalasparśa);
    - yogapaṭṭa — both legs bent, the knees raised (tiryag ūrdhvagatau), with a band (paṭṭa);
    - prasārita — the legs extended (suprasāritam, prasārya caraṇadvayam);
    - yathāsaṃstha — “as it sits” (yathāsthitiḥ).
- The Kiraṇa’s ṣaḍaṅga includes āsana (pratyāhāra, dhyāna, prāṇāyāma, dhāraṇā, āsana, samādhi), and tarka is not in it. By this the Kiraṇa differs from the ṣaḍaṅga-yoga with tarka (e.g. in the Niśvāsa); I have not checked this point against other texts.
- The Kiraṇa quotation on vīra in the commentary on the Somaśambhupaddhati (§ 1.10: vīrākhyaṃ tac chṛṇuṣvetat | dakṣiṇañ cordhvata sthitvā vāmapādatalasthitaṃ) does not coincide with the text of both transcripts. It is either a different redaction or an inexact quotation.

13.3. The check of the sent text “where to find the full Kiraṇa”

- Correct:
    - T0998 and T0746 exist and open;

    - the Himalayan Academy PDF (Sabharathnam's translation, handwritten) opens;
    - 64 chapters (after T0998);
    - the Yogapāda = chs. 58–64;
    - ch. 58 is the first chapter of the Yogapāda.
- Incorrect — the list of postures "58.4–5": padmaka, daṇḍamūrdha, svastika, daṇḍa, kaukkuṭa, vīrāsana, yogapaṭṭa, prasārita. Both transcripts have no daṇḍamūrdha, daṇḍa or kaukkuṭa. Rather, the sent text omits ardhacandra, paryaṅka and yathāsaṃstha, and the order is different. The Sanskrit of these verses in the sent text does not correspond to the manuscripts.
- Incorrect — "58.3": the variant with tarkaṃ dhāraṇayā … asthikāryaṃ is absent in the manuscripts. There are six limbs with āsana, without tarka.
- Not verified: the Devakottai 1932 edition (archive.org returns error 500 on the PDF); Vivanti 1975; the Himalayan Academy translation article by article.
- The comparative table in the sent text incorrectly represents the Niśvāsa order (see § 11.2) and the Mataṅga list. In the Mataṅga there are 4 postures: paryaṅka, kamala, bhadra, svastika (§ 12).

14. The check of the sent text on karaṇa and udghāta; Tantrasadbhāva (Bang 2018) and Siddhayogeśvarīmata (Törzsök 1999)

14.1. New places with postures

Siddhayogeśvarīmata — J. Törzsök, The Doctrine of Magic Female Spirits… (DPhil, Oxford 1999). The scan of the edition was taken from archive.org; I recognized it with OCR and checked it against the images of the pages, which lie in `texts_extra/sym_torzsok/scans/`.

- Siddhayogeśvarīmata 16.47ab — Yogic posture or ritual posture (japa), ✔ verified against the primary source (the edition, p. 40; PDF line 131): > sthito vāpy upaviṣṭo vā dhīro vīrāsanasthitaḥ | suniṣkampo japed devīm ekacittas tu tadgataḥ ||
    - Apparatus (variant readings after Törzsök 1999's edition; D — the paper manuscript NAK 5-2403, microfilm NGMPP A 203/6, Devanagari; after Törzsök probably a 20th-century copy of a lost palm-leaf; N — the manuscript of the Asiatic Society, Calcutta, no. 5465 (G), Newari script, dated 793 of the Nepalese era (after Törzsök c. AD 1663); "DN" — so in both manuscripts; "corr." — corrected by the editor; "em." — the editor's emendation; "°" — the rest of the word omitted): 47a sthito corr.: sthitaṃ DN; upaviṣṭo corr.: upaviṣṭaṃ DN; 47b °sthitaḥ corr.: °sthitam N : °saṃsthitam D.
    - Törzsök's translation: "standing or sitting in the Vīra posture, … without trembling".

- Siddhayogeśvarīmata 22.10 — iconography (the yoginīs), ✔ verified against the primary source (the edition, p. 51; PDF line 142): > pūrvacakrakṛtādhārāḥ paryaṅkāsanasaṃsthitāḥ | yogapaṭṭakabaddhāṅgā rūpam eṣāṃ yuge yuge ||
    - Apparatus: 10d °āsana° em.: °āgata° DN. The word paryaṅkāsana is the editor's emendation.
    - Törzsök translates yogapaṭṭaka as "loincloth of Yogis". In her note 11 it is said: paryaṅka — "the seated posture of ascetics, identical with the Vīrāsana, 'sitting on the thighs/heels'". This is the editor's interpretation, not the text.

Verses with translation: Siddhayogeśvarīmata 16.47 (the vīra at japa) and 22.10 (the paryaṅkāsana of the yoginīs) — after Törzsök's edition, 1999

Source: `Torzsok1999_ocr (texts_extra/sym_torzsok/) : 6295; 6970–6972`.

There is no e-text; both places were checked against the images of the edition's pages (16.47 — p. 40, PDF line 131; 22.10 — p. 51, PDF line 142) and are in the recognized text. The apparatus in brief: 47a sthito corrected by the editor, both manuscripts have sthitaṃ; 22.10d "paryaṅkāsana" is the editor's emendation at the manuscripts' "°āgata". The manuscripts themselves: N (Newari, the Calcutta one, c. 1663) and D (Devanagari, probably a 20th-century copy).

Literal translation

Thus with zeal having honoured, abiding at the southern [side], standing or sitting, firm, abiding in vīrāsana, quite unshaken, let him repeat the goddess with a single mind, gone into her.

Resting on [the figure of] the first cakra, placed on the paryaṅkāsana, with the bodies bound with the yogapaṭṭaka — such is their appearance in each yuga.

Smooth translation

Thus having honoured with zeal [and the pilgrimage places], standing or sitting — firm, in the “hero” posture (vīra), completely motionless, let him repeat the goddess’s mantra with a single mind, gone into her.

[The yoginīs], resting on [the scheme of] the first cakra, are placed on the paryaṅka chair, the bodies bound with the yogic band — such is their appearance by the yugas.

Notes

- “Dakṣiṇasyām avasthitaḥ” — probably “abiding at the south of the [altar]” — rendered after the edition. The variants of 47b “vīrāsanasthitaḥ” / “vīrāsanasaṃsthitam” (D) do not hinder the reading.
- The word “paryaṅkāsana” is the editor’s emendation (the manuscripts: “°āsanāgata°”? sic “°āgata°”), and Törzsök interprets the yogapaṭṭaka as a primitive “loincloth of yogis”; in note 11 she links the paryaṅka to the ascetics’ posture “identical with vīrāsana”. Cf. the full-fledged paryaṅka of Mataṅga 2.15–16 (the yogapaṭṭa strap behind the back, the knees bent — its block) — the earliest description of this setting in the Mantramārga.
- Törzsök calls a number of references to “mudrā” (Siddhayogeśvarīmata 3.51 and others) “postures”, since mudrā is wider than a hand-gesture. Concrete descriptions of postures in the edited chapters there are none. In recognition I found only the two places above. Chapters 3 and 16 contain the nyāsa of letters onto parts of the body — these are not postures.

Tantrasadbhāva — J. Bang, Selected Chapters from the Tantrasadbhāva (PhD, Hamburg 2018; CC BY), a PDF with a text layer lies in `texts_extra/tantrasadbhava/`. Chapters 1, 3 (part), 9, 18 and 28 were edited. * Lists and descriptions of postures in these chapters there are none. * Tantrasadbhāva 9.562–569b — Name only (prohibitions): among the objects one must not touch with the foot or step over, the yogapaṭṭa ("a yoga band") is named — as an object, not a posture. * Tantrasadbhāva 28.26c–27 (udghāta) — Bang's translation, p. 458: "through one, two, three, four and five eruptions (udghātas). Once the breath is blocked, it reaches the head and returns…". On the details of udghāta Bang refers to ch. 27 (the Raktākṛṣṭi section; not edited) and to Vasudeva 2004: 402–416. * Bang, introduction, note 5: the quotation baddhvā padmāsanaṃ yogī, ascribed to the Tantrasadbhāva, is actually taken from Mālinīvijayottaratantra 7.15c–17b. * In the apparatus of Siddhayogeśvarīmata 22 (note on vv. 11–19) parallels in Tantrasadbhāva 16.134–140 are indicated. Hence the context of Siddhayogeśvarīmata 22.10 is also in Tantrasadbhāva 16, but verse 10 itself is not indicated there. Tantrasadbhāva 16 and 27 are not edited — an open gap (A3), cannot be checked until the e-text is obtained. Clarification (17.10.2026): the full volume Bang 2018 (547 pp.) was sent and checked — only the same chs. 1, 3, 9, 18, 28 are edited in it; BUT by the manuscript's colophons in that volume (pp. 44–45) ch. 16 is identified: it is the "yoginīlakṣaṇādhikāra" (the marks of the yoginīs at the 24 pīṭhas) — precisely the theme of Siddhayogeśvarīmata 22, whence the parallel to Siddhayogeśvarīmata 22.11–19; ch. 27 is the Raktākṛṣṭi section, in which udghāta is treated in detail (Vasudeva 2004: 402–416; Bang 2016).

14.2. The "jolt" at udghāta: where it is really said

- Mṛgendra, Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha's vṛtti on Yogapāda 19½ (Mṛgendrāgama: Muktabodha e-text no. M00037, keyed from the edition: editor śāstrī kṛṣṇa; śivāgama siddhānta paripalana saṅgham, devakottai, 1928; line numbers in that file: 11436–11437) — ✔ verified against the primary source: > pārṣṇibhyāṃ muṣkapīḍaṃ udghātavaśāt utplutau vārayan akuñcitaśarīraḥ susthito…

  "with the heels preventing pressure upon the scrotum at the leap-up (utpluti) due to udghāta, without bending the body, sitting steadily…".

  - This is commentary on Mṛgendra, not on the Mālinīvijayottara (cf. § 1.5 and § 10, item 5).
  - In the sent text the word utpluta is wrongly ascribed to the Mālinīvijayottaratantra context.
- Mālinīvijayottaratantra 17.10cd–12 (GRETIL, Vasudeva's edition) — ✔ verified against the primary source word for word: > eṣām abhyasanaṃ kuryāt padmakādyāsanasthitaḥ || adhamaḥ sakṛdudghāto madhyamo dviguṇo mataḥ | jyeṣṭhaḥ syād yas trirudghātaḥ sa ca dvādaśamātrakaḥ || trirjānuveṣṭanān mātrā triguṇāc choṭikātrayāt |

The new "gesture" (the natural sign), 17.12ab: the time-measure mātrā — to circle the knee thrice [with the hand] (jānuveṣṭana) and to snap the fingers thrice (choṭikā).

- Mālinīvijayottaratantra 17.40cd–41a — Name only (bodily signs): prathamaṃ mahatī ghūrṇir abhyāsāt tasya jāyate | tataḥ prakampo… — "first strong reeling, then trembling".
- Kaulajñānanirṇaya 14.21 (Muktabodha e-text no. M00027, keyed from the edition: editor Bagchi, P. C.; Metropolitan Printing and Pub. House, Calcutta, 1934; line number in that file: 1023) — the signs: kampas tobhas tathā bhāṣā mudrām utplavanaṃ tathā — trembling, stobha, speech, the mudrā and the leap-up/lift-off (utplavana). The posture is not described.
- Siddhayogeśvarīmata 3.49 (Törzsök's translation, p. 116): "one's body shivers and it suddenly takes off in the air" — a sign of possession, not a posture.
- Nayasūtra 4.116–118 — ◐ after Goodall's translation (Roots of Yoga 4.9; open gap — A1, the Sanskrit only in Goodall et al. 2015): "He masters [these fixations] through one, two, three, four and five eruptions… it is called 'eruption' (udghāta) when the breath, having been restrained, goes to the head and back".

14.3. The check of the sent text point by point

- Confirmed:
  - Nayasūtra 4.14c–15 — eight postures (the Sanskrit coincides with Kafle, § 11.2).
  - Nayasūtra 4.105 — prasārita and añjalika are not in the list. The editors do not count yathāsukha as a separate posture (Kafle, note 765).
  - Nayasūtra 4.106 after Goodall's translation (Roots of Yoga 3.3): "tongue at his palate, teeth not touching, body upright, gaze on the [tip of] his nose" — a static setting.
  - Svacchandatantra 4.365–367 — the Sanskrit is verbatim correct (GRETIL SvaT_4.365–367; see § 1.1).
  - Mālinīvijayottaratantra 17.10cd–11 — verbatim correct.
  - Tantrasadbhāva 28.26c–27 — p. 458 in Bang is correct.
  - Kafle's discussion of karaṇa — note 766, printed pp. 270–271 — correct.
  - Kafle's parallels: Triśikhibrāhmaṇa 91–92, Svacchandatantra 4.365–367, Uttarakāmika 23.209–210, Bṛhatkālottara — correct. The Sanskrit of the Uttarakāmika Kafle indeed does not give — I found the Uttarakāmika myself (§ 14.4).
- Inaccurate:
  - The Sanskrit of Mataṅga 2.22c–28 is distorted in the sent text. In Kafle and Bhatt (§ 12): tiryagau (Bhatt has a note that this is an ārṣa form), not tiryakau; niṣkampāṃ sudṛḍhām ṛjvīṃ nātistabdhāṃ na kuñcitām | grīvāṃ, not niṣkampaṃ … grīvaṃ; dyāvāpṛthivyābhimukho dṛṅ[n]āsāgrasamāśrayā, not dṛṣṭyagrasamāśrayaḥ. In the sent text the gaze at the tip of the nose is lost (nāsāgra). Likewise sammīlayen, dantān.

    - Kafle's list of parallels is incomplete: Sarvajñānottara Yogapāda 250–251 and Bhojadeva's Siddhāntasārapaddhati are omitted. "ĪŚGP 5.3" — in Kafle it is Īśānagurudevapaddhati V:3, p.185.
    - The Svacchandatantra quotation given as "365–366" actually covers 365cd–366ab. The beginning is karaṇaṃ tu tataḥ kṛtvā lakṣaṇaṃ tasya vai śṛṇu (365ab).
    - Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha and *utpluta — this is the Mṛgendra vṛtti (§ 14.2), not commentary on the Mālinīvijayottaratantra.
- Cannot be checked (I do not have the Goodall et al. 2015 volume):
    - the page numbers 215–217, 226–227, 468–470, 487–490. Bang refers to Goodall 2015: 489 and onward and 491–493 on the prāṇāyāma of Nayasūtra 4.109 and onward — this agrees with "487–490" for 4.105–107;
    - the assertion "the editors consider 4.106 corrupt";
    - Sanderson's conjecture in 4.107;
    - Nayasūtra 1.29–45 "the letters formed by the body" — CORRECTION. In the previous reply I wrote there is no confirmation. That was an error: there is one, in my own § 10, item 2. Mallinson & Singleton (Roots of Yoga, ch. 3, note 7): "Nayasūtra (1.29ff.) teaches the practitioner how to reproduce the shapes of the letters of the alphabet with his body. Some letters are already present in the body and do not require the adoption of particular postures (e.g. 1.34–35a), while others involve holding parts of the body in particular attitudes (e.g. 1.43)". The status ◐ (translation only, via a secondary source). The sent text's details (1.31: the body extended, the shins pressed together, the arms at the sides = a; the dating "4th–7th centuries") are not verified.
    - Jayadrathayāmala 4.2.612–622 — also a CORRECTION. By Roots of Yoga 6.1.2 the phetkārīmudrā requires a posture: seated, the left foot at the anus, the right leg extended and slightly bent, the fists at the earlobes (§ 10, item 3). I have no Sanskrit — ◐ (translation only). Serbaeva's quotation (tatra phetkāriṇīṃ badhvā…) is not verified.
- True in essence: pīṭha in the Tantrasadbhāva and similar texts more often means a sacred site. But in Kauṇḍinya (pīṭhaka), the Sarvajñānottara (pīṭhārdha) and Dharmaputrikā 2.12 (pīṭhāsana) it is a posture (§§ 6a, 7, 11.3).

14.4. The karaṇa parallels from Kafle's list found in my corpus — ✔ verified against the primary source

Five places in Kafle are marked as "Sanskrit not given". They turned up in my e-texts.

Verses with translation: Kāmika-uttarabhāga (Uttarakāmika) 23.205–213: the ācārya's posture at the joining of the pupil with Śiva (nirvāṇadīkṣā)

Source: Muktabodha M00125, file lines 4316–4332.

Chapter 23 (nirvāṇadīkṣāvidhi) of the Kāmika-uttarabhāga (in the catalogue — Uttarakāmika) describes how after the sakalīkaraṇa the teacher joins (saṃyojayet) the pupil's consciousness with Śiva. He himself sits upon the "bindu-place", passes the kalās from indhikā to unmanā through his body, makes the inhale and the retention — the tongue to the palate, the mouth slightly open, the teeth not touching the teeth, the body straightened — and through the kumbhaka directs the pupil's consciousness, pure as crystal, into Śiva. The formula "dantair dantān na saṃspṛśan" is that very karaṇa setting (Svacchanda 4.365–367, Sarvajñānottara YP 12, Niśvāsamukha 4.50–51); Kafle cited these verses without the Sanskrit (it turned up in the e-text, § 14.4).

Literal translation

The teacher, whose place is vidyātattva, sits on the bindu-seat: [the kalās] indhikā, dīpikā, rocikā, mocikā and the ascending one, the subtlest, as amṛta; the kalā called binduśakti and nādaśakti — with these kalās, O twice-born, the best of teachers has woven the robe of his body; and vyāpinī in the form of the ether, endless and supreme, and [the two] supportless and unleaning [sic], joined with the outer and the inner organs; the whole ātmatattva up to unmanā — [fills his] body. Having made the inhale and retention, with the tongue fastened to the palate, with the mouth slightly ajar, not touching the teeth with the teeth, with the body rightly straightened, having joined the pupil with himself and mindful of the suṣumnā as one with the prāṇa-wind, — having uttered the mantra by virtue of abandoning the [outer] cause, the pupil's consciousness, pure as crystal, he will join with Śiva by the full kumbhaka, with the withdrawn mind, by the kalā śakti that gives prāṇa, from himself.

Smooth translation

The teacher sits on a seat fashioned as bindu and passes through his body the row of the kalās — from indhikā through binduśakti and nādaśakti to vyāpinī and unmanā; his body is wholly woven of these kalās. Then, having made an inhale and a breath retention, with the tongue pressed to the palate, the mouth slightly ajar, not touching the teeth with the teeth, and holding the body duly straightened, he joins the pupil with his own body and, mindful of the suṣumnā as one with the prāṇa-wind, utters the mantra — and joins the pupil's consciousness, pure as crystal, with Śiva by the full kumbhaka.

Notes

- The target place of Kafle: his list of parallels to the karaṇa formula did indicate these verses, but he did not give the Sanskrit of the Uttarakāmika (§ 14.4). The chapter colophon: "iti uttarakāmikākhye mahātantre nirvāṇadīkṣāvidhistrayoviṃśatitamaḥ paṭalaḥ" (the same file, line 4353–4354).

- A prose retelling of this moment is in Bhojadeva's Siddhāntasārapaddhati (the same manuscript tradition): "pūrakakumbhako kṛtve [sic] jihvān tāluke saṃyojya iṣadvyāvṛtavaktro dantair dantā na spaśan [sic] samunnatakāyaḥ śiṣyātmānam ātmani saṃyojya…" (Siddhāntasārapaddhati: Muktabodha e-text no. M00531, keyed from a manuscript: NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) 5-743/vi ‹zaivatantra› 203 Reel no: B 28/19; line numbers in that file: 1376–1377, the quotation already checked, § 14.4) — from there the understanding of "īṣaddhayā" is visible: the Kauṇḍinya-style "iṣadvyāvṛtavaktro" (the quasi-word iṣad "slightly" + vyāvṛtta "opened" + vaktra "mouth"), i.e. "with the mouth slightly ajar".

- "Bindu-kḷpta-āsana" is not cushion geometry, but a mantric "bindu" seat (cf. the "mantrasiṃhāsanārūḍha" of Sarvajñānottara 48 — seated on a mantric lion-throne, § 1.7, iconography): the teacher sits inside a support constructed by mantra.

- Against the background of the karaṇa parallels the context here is unique: the body setting (jihvā-tālu, teeth, the level torso) is performed not for solitary yoga, but for saṃyojanā — the transfer of the pupil's consciousness into Śiva through the guru's kumbhaka.

- Bhojadeva's Siddhāntasārapaddhati — the very manuscript Kafle names (NGMCP B 28/19; Muktabodha M00531, file lines 1376–1377). 15. The check of the "dossier" A1–A8 (the sent text). Result: the statuses do not change

Below each place from the sent text is compared with what I already have: e-texts, editions, scholars' quotations. Almost all the "critical texts" in it contradict the verifiable sources. Hence it is a generated text, not excerpts from editions. Verse	Text (beginning)	Contents
563	பத்திரங் கோமுகம் பங்கயங் கேசரி சொத்திரம் வீரஞ் சுகாதனம் ஓரேழு… எட்டெட்டுப் பத்தொடு நூறு பலஆ சனமே	The seven best: bhadra, gomukha, paṅkaya (padma), kesari (siṃha), cottiram (? the commentators interpret differently), vīra, sukhāsana; “eight-eight, with ten and a hundred” — many postures. The Tamil commentators count this as 126 postures; the arithmetic is unclear

Thus the old mark ⚠ about the “126 postures of the Tirumantiram” is confirmed. The verse itself is confirmed, not the number: the number is the commentators’ interpretation.

Part V. The extended context of the Part IV quotations

Here are collected all the catalogue passages that have a reference to an e-text line — 189 passages in all. For each are given:

- the catalogue section (Part IV) to which the passage belongs;
- where in the source: the number of the e-text in the Muktabodha library or the name of the GRETIL file (this is a link — the file opens in the browser by it) and the line numbers of that file. All files are listed in Appendix B;
- the chapter: the nearest chapter rubric above the quotation (if there is one in the file) and the first colophon of the form iti … paṭalaḥ below it. In some files the colophons are skipped or stand in the commentary, in which case the rubric or the verse numbering is more reliable. “—” means that no colophon was found;
- the “Context”: what the passage is about (a ritual, a yoga chapter, iconography, a prohibition etc.) and what happens before the posture and after it;
- the extended Sanskrit text: the whole stanza mentioning the posture, with two stanzas before and after (up to ~24 lines). The number at the left of each line is its number in the file. The lines of the quotation itself are marked with ▸. For long ranges (more than 40 lines) the beginning and the end are given; the middle is replaced by the sign […] and is in the catalogue or in the file.

Sanskrit is reproduced literally according to the electronic text (Muktabodha/GRETIL), with all the misprints and editorial marks: “p. 41)” is a page number of the printed edition, “[k: …]”, “[… ka pāṭhaḥ]” are the editor’s marks (pāṭha means “lesson, variant reading”, and ka, kha are the sigla customary in Indian editions for manuscripts). These are the editors’ remarks, not the text of the tantra. The retelling in the “Context” is made from the quoted text. Where the sense is unclear there is “(?)”.

Sources without an electronic text are not repeated here, because long excerpts are already given in the catalogue: * Niśvāsa (the Kafle 2015 and Goodall et al. 2015 editions) — § 11; * Mataṅga, Yogapāda (Bhatt 1982) — § 12; * Kiraṇa 58 (IFP T0746/T0998) — § 13; * Siddhayogeśvarīmata (Törzsök) and Tantrasadbhāva (Bang) — § 14; * Dharmaputrikā (Barois 2017) — § 6a; * Roots of Yoga (Jayadrathayāmala, the Niśvāsa letters) — § 10; * Tirumantiram — § 15.

Corrections found in collation (entered into Part IV): * Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati 52.128 is in vol. 2 (Muktabodha e-text no. M00017, typed from the edition: editor gaṇapati śāstrī; bharatiya vidya prakāśan, Delhi, 1922; line number in that file: 14547), not in M00233. * Tantrāloka 32.10 and the Jayaratha quotations — the file M00093 (ch. 15–38), not M00092. * The main one: “Ācārasāra 1.17–55” turned out to be the Haṭhapradīpikā itself. In the manuscript M00501 (NGMCP B 116/8) the 4 upadeśas of the Haṭhapradīpikā with Svātmārāma’s colophons are copied first (lines 1–1085), and the tantra begins only at line 1086. The Haṭhapradīpikā posture block is not a tantric testimony; § 3.5 and the table of § 0 are corrected. In the Ācārasāra itself only baddhāsana (Ācārasāratantra: Muktabodha e-text no. M00501, typed from the manuscript: NGMCP 3-325 Reel B 116/8; line number in that file: 2623) and the postures of the six acts in the appended Samayāstotra (Muktabodha M00501, file line 4742) were found. * Uttarakāmika 23.209cd–211a (karaṇa) has been added to the survey (it was not caught earlier by the reference analysis).

Omitted: the lists of “traps” — terms that look like postures but are not postures (§ 8, § 3.3a “Not postures”), where the context is already explained in the catalogue, and references to colophons only (Kāmika Kamikāgama uttarabhāga: Muktabodha e-text no. M00125, typed from the edition: Madras, 1909; line number in that file: 4353; Haṭhapradīpikā/Ācārasāra Muktabodha M00501, file lines 511, 940, 1085, 1086, 3535, 4525).

1.1. Svacchandatantra (GRETIL; Muktabodha M00091, with Kṣemarāja’s commentary Uddyota)

1. Svacchandatantra 7.290ab–291ab — yoga chapter, after the choice of place (7.287–289). Yoga posture; name only

- In the catalogue: Part IV, § 1.1 · In the source: Svacchandatantra [or Svacchandabhairavatantra]: GRETIL e-text, file sa_svacchandatantra.txt, typed from the Dvivedī and Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies editions, by chapters;

input by members of the Śaiva reading group of the École française d'Extrême-Orient in Pondicherry (per the file header); line numbers in that file: 4923–4926

- Chapter rubric above (line 4054): saptamaḥ paṭalaḥ
- Colophon (below): iti svacchandatantre saptamaḥ paṭalaḥ
- Context: The 7th yoga chapter. First the choice of place: an auspicious one, "with righteous inhabitants" (7.289), and the worship of Bhairava with Vināyaka. Then the salutation of the former teachers and the assuming of the posture. After the posture (7.291cd) come the burning (dahana), the "extracting" (utpūyana) and the irrigation with nectar (plāvana), i.e. the purification of the body with which the yoga exercise begins.

- Colophon (below): iti śrīsvacchandatantre dvitīyaḥ paṭalaḥ
- Context: Chapter 2, the daily pūjā. Protective mantras have been placed in the ten directions, in the centre Brahmā has been honoured. Then the sādhaka sits down on a seat consecrated with the praṇava and "binds the well-mastered posture" (which one is not said). After this he purifies his hands with the weapon-mantra.

- Colophon (below): iti svacchandatantre tattvadīkṣāprakāśanaṃ nāma pañcamaḥ paṭalaḥ
- Context: The rite for a child-pupil (śiśu) within the initiation. At the entrance a small maṇḍala is drawn, darbha grass is laid, the seat is consecrated with the praṇava, and the pupil is "placed" (niveśayet) on it: feet together, body motionless, face calm, palms folded. Then the guru, facing east, sprinkles him with the water of Śiva under the weapon-mantra. Whether sitting or standing — the text does not say unambiguously.

- Colophon (below): iti svacchandatantre tattvadīkṣāprakāśanaṃ nāma pañcamaḥ paṭalaḥ
- Context: Chapter 4 (initiation through the tattvas). The retention of breath (kumbhaka) opens the downward-facing "lotus-knots" of the channels (4.364). Then the guru assumes the "divine karaṇa": the tongue to the palate, the mouth slightly open, lips and rows of teeth not touching, the gaze neither up nor down, the body straightened. In this position he pronounces (uccāraṇa) the tattva. This is a technique inside the rite, not a separate posture.

- Context: Chapter 7 (the mudrās). The list of mudrās: after the daṃṣṭrā-mudrā “of Caṃuṇḍā” (7.11) follows the description of the bodily mudrā: the foot at the left knee, the arms hanging down behind the back, the eyes bulging, the neck curved, the tongue stuck out. This is a bodily “posture-mudrā”, not a seated āsana.

(kakhatraya) and casts it out. In 7.16–17 this mudrā grants movement in the sky. Kṣemarāja quotes this verse in his commentary on the Netra (see below).

If the contemplation does not become clear, the movement [of the mind] is interrupted by prāṇāyāma of five kinds: pūraka, kumbhaka, recaka, apakarṣaka, utkarṣa (17.1–3). Each kind is described in detail; the last two are "manifold" (17.9–10ab). Then: "to practise them, sitting in the padmaka and other postures". Next come the degrees of the udghāta: the single one is the lowest, the middle one grants siddhis (17.10cd ff.).

1.5. Mṛgendra (GRETIL; Muktabodha M00037 with the vṛtti of Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha)

35. Yogapāda 17–19. Yoga posture; with a description (alignment of the body without a posture name); GRETIL (= Mṛgendratantra 4.18)

- In the catalogue: Part IV, § 1.5 · In the source: Mṛgendrāgama: Muktabodha e-text no. M00037, typed from the edition: editor śāstrī kṛṣṇa; śivāgama siddhānta paripalana saṅgham, devakottai, 1928; line numbers in that file: 11414–11428
- Colophon (below): iti śrībhaṭṭavidyākaṇṭhātmajaśrībhaṭṭanārāyaṇakaṇṭhaviracitāyāṃ mṛgendravṛttau yogapādassamāptaḥ |
- Context: The Yogapāda (4.17–19), the beginning of the prāṇāyāma. The yogin is healthy, he eats wholesome and digested food. The place: a house fenced with three walls, or a forest without obstacles. He “sits in a good posture” (svāsanastha; the commentator reads this word as su-āsana “a good posture, a good seat”) facing north. Then he salutes Maheśvana, Umā, Skanda and Gaṇapati. Neck, head and chest straight, the gaze at the tip of the nose, the testicles covered with the heels, the teeth not touching, the tongue curled back. Exhalation through the nostril “up to the śakti”.

- Context: Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha's vṛtti on the Yogapāda 4.17, the gloss on svāsanastha. The sense is twofold: (1) he sits on a good seat of cloth or skin, on a stand etc.; (2) "in a yoga posture the marks of which are given in other āgamas: one of the padma, svastika, ardhacandra type etc.", i.e. in one that is firm and comfortable thanks to practice.

- Colophon (below): —
- Context: The Kriyāpāda 3.87 (the sādhana of the mantra, the night vigil). After the evening ācamana and the dismissal of the kṣetrapālas: having spread a good skin, "having bound the posture", wakeful, contemplating the mantra, repeat it; when tired — sleep briefly on it. Vṛtti: the skin is antelope; the posture is one of ardhacandra, padma, svastika etc. as shown in the Yogapāda.

- Colophon (below): iti kālottare mahātaṃtre antaryāgapaṭalaṃ ||
- Context: The chapter on the inner (mental) offering (antaryāga). First the praise of the mental yāga: without it — “the state of a piśāca”. Then the preparation and the injunction to choose one of the eight postures: svastika, padma, vīra, ardhacandra, prasārita, yogapaṭṭa, paryaṅka, yathāsukha. Each is described. Then the tongue to the palate, the teeth not touching, the kūrma- or liṅga-mudrā is bound. The postures are the preparation for the inner pūjā.

41. Yogapaṭala — the term karaṇa. Yoga posture; with a description

- In the catalogue: Part IV, § 1.6 · In the source: Kāllotara: Muktabodha e-text no. E00012, typed from the manuscript: NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms) Reel No. B 29/59 Manuscript No. pra - 89; line numbers in that file: 15745–15762
- Colophon (below): iti kālottare mahātantre yogapaṭalaṃ ||
- Context: The yogapaṭala. First the definition of the prāṇāyāma: “the retention [of the breath] having become that”, three kinds. Then: “before, rulefully assume the paryaṅka, the kamala (lotus), the bhadra or the svastika, motionless, as is customary for one”. Next the kūrma-mudrā, the gaze at the tip of the nose, the eyes slightly closed, the teeth not touching, the tongue not in the middle of the palate. This is the “karaṇa of the path of yoga”; then the prāṇāyāma follows.

night devoted to the vīrāsana”. An ascetic vigil, not a yoga posture in the narrow sense.

- Colophon (below): iti śrīsarvamantrānottare kriyāpāde arcanāprakaraṇam ||

- Context: The Kriyāpāda, the pūjā-and-japa section. After the pranayams, with the mantra on the śikhā, to repeat single-directionally. “In a bound padmāsana, silently, with a rosary in the hand, or having bound the svastika, with an even body and head”. The mind is turned to nothing else, and the mantrin becomes “that” (tanmaya). The posture for the japa.

93. 9.30 — negation

- Colophon (below): || iti śrīkulārṇave nirvāṇamokṣadvāre mahārahasye sarvāgamottamottame sapādalakṣagranthe pañcamakhaṇḍe ūrdhvāmnāyatantre
- Context: The Kulārṇava, the polemic “knowledge is above external yoga”. For the one who has known Brahman, no vows are needed, “no fan is needed in the Malaya breeze”; there is no āsikā-bandhana, no binding of the nose, no yama and niyama. “Yoga is not from the padmāsana and not from gazing at the tip of the nose”: the adepts call yoga the unity of the jīva and the ātman. A negative mention.

- Context: The Kulārṇava, the rules of conduct inside the circle (śrīcakra/kulacakra). Not to worship with one hand, not in the presence of the paśu, entering and leaving with a bow. “In the śrīcakra do not stand, do not sit on a seat and do not [sit] in a vīrāsana, O dearest”. A prohibited posture in the ritual circle.

- Context: The Kulārṇava, the rules of conduct before the guru. One enters leaving behind one’s vehicle, sandals, parasol. The list of prohibitions in his presence: washing the feet, anointing, urinating, spitting, sleeping… “vīrāsana”, rude words, loosening the hair, a turban, nakedness, “stretching out the legs”, disputes etc. The vīrāsana — a posture of disrespect before the guru.

Then "the postures padma, svastika, vīra and bhadra are means for the steadiness of the mind" and their descriptions (27.60–63). Immediately afterwards comes the prāṇāyāma of three grades (27.64ff.).

- Context: Śāradātilaka 23.131 with Rāghavabhaṭṭa's commentary, in the chapter on the six magical acts (ṣaṭkarman). Each act has its own posture: padma, svastika, vikaṭa, kukkuṭa, vajra, bhadraka. Rāghava quotes the definitions of vikaṭa and kukkuṭa (the arms between the knees and shins, from the utkaṭāsana), and then the seats for the various rites (elephant hide for stambhana etc.).

A description of the padmāsana, “excellent in the worship of Tripurā”. The svastika, gomukha, ūrdhvasvastika, paryaṅka are also named. One who sits in the “bound” posture, looking at the deity, “does not see the fault of the feet”: showing the deity one’s feet during the pūjā is impermissible (8.62).

- Context: Gandharvatantra ch. 36 (bringing and worshipping the śakti), the “other homa”, which makes one Brahman. “In a deserted pure place, with purified channels, sitting on an even seat, with an even body, comfortably; sitting in the padmāsana”, one cleanses the path of the prāṇa by inhalation, retention and exhalation. The hands covered, the eyes on the tip of the nose without blinking, the teeth touching, the lips and tongue to the palate — the sundarī-mudrā. Then the raising of the wind from the ādhāra into the sahasrāra.

The square brackets are the editor’s explanations (the definitions of the padmāsana, bhadrāsana etc.), not the text of the tantra. Example: śānti — padmamudrā, padmāsana, a mantra with namaḥ.

3.5. Vārāhītantra (M00317, ch. 26) and the Ācārasāratantra manuscript (M00501): the Haṭha-yoga block and pīṭha = āsana

- Colophon (below): ityācārasāratantre prathamaḥ paṭalaḥ ||
- Context: The Ācārasāra proper, ch. 1 (the Kaula rites). The place and time: on the bank of the Kṛṣṇā, at the confluence of the “five Gangās”, in the month Māgha, on the second lunar day of the dark half, at night. A hut (kusūla) is made of straw away from people; after the evening rite it is worshipped. The mantrin, remembering Devī, goes inside: “there the yogin, having bound a posture (baddhāsana), let him disregard the torment of cold”. He repeats 5000 times; then the five-faced, eight-armed goddess appears and grants him the kamaṇḍalu. An ascetic vigil; the posture is not named.

- Context: The samayāstotra (an appendix after the Ācārasāra colophon on Muktabodha M00501, file line 4525, in the same manuscript). The six magical acts are distributed over the times of day: the first time — for appeasement, the second — for enmity etc. (68–69). Then the postures: the padmāsana [for śānti?], the svastika…, the vikaṭa — for enmity, the kukkuṭa — for paralysing, the vajra — for subjugation, the bhadraka — for killing: “six postures are named”. Then the elements by acts (71). The text is corrupt (svastike, vajrayed). The scheme as in Śāradātilaka 23.131 (§ 3.4).

- Context: ⚠ This is not the Ācārasāra but the Haṭhapradīpikā itself (upadeśa 1, verses 16–54 in the electronic text's numbering). Lines 1–1085 of the M00501 file are the four upadeśas of the Haṭhapradīpikā with Svātmārāma's colophons (Muktabodha M00501, file lines 511, 940, 1085), copied in the same NGMCP B 116/8 manuscript before the tantra; see the Muktabodha description. Content: the six conditions for success in yoga (1.16). Then "the postures accepted by Vasiṣṭha and the sages, by Matsyendra and the yogins" as the first limb of haṭha (1.17–18), the posture block 1.19–54. The upshot: "thus, having bound the postures, the yogin conquers fatigue". Not counted as a witness of the tantra.

Then the signs of the skulls (muṇḍa) by varṇas. The upshot (48–49): Kālikā is always in the cemeteries, therefore the vīrāsana and the vīra-sādhana are commendable. The vīrāsana here is a kind of seat or rite, not a crossing of the legs.

The king, a commander or a warrior wishing to fight must first examine the term of his life: if it is long — fight in armour and with companions; if short — distribute his property among his relatives (52.123–124). The method (52.127–128): in the month Puṣya at the Puṣya nakṣatra, having fasted the day before, having risen in the last quarter of the night and done what is necessary — “well seated, pure, silent, with a straight body, head and neck”, at the moment of the rising of the constellation Makara — examine one’s own breath.

Abhinavagupta paraphrases Mālinīvijayottaratantra 7.15: "having bound the padmāsana, the yogin places the Akṣeśvara (kṣa) into the navel, leads it as a stick up to the three voids". The upshot (32.11): "having bound it, one obtains movement in the sky".

14.4. Parallels of the karaṇa from Kaphle's list found in my corpus — (checked against the originals)

183. Uttarakāmika 23.209cd–211a (nirvāṇadīkṣāvidhi; the colophon of ch. 23 below). This is the guru's body position at the joining of the disciple with Śiva (yojanā)

- In the catalogue: Part IV, § 14.4 · In the source: Kamikāgama uttarabhāga: Muktabodha e-text no. M00125, typed from the edition: Madras, 1909; line numbers in that file: 4325–4327
- Colophon (below): iti uttarakāmikākhye mahātantre nirvāṇadīkṣāvidhistrayoviṃśatitamaḥ paṭalaḥ
- Context: The Uttarakāmika ch. 23 (the nirvāṇa-dīkṣā). The guru moves through the nāda-śakti levels (vyāpinī, vyomarūpā, anantā, anāthā, anāśritā — the "external karaṇa"), the internal karaṇa and the "three tattvas" (ātman, śuddha, unmanā) that fill the body (23.208–209). Then: "having done the in-breath and the hold, the tongue fixed to the palate, the mouth slightly open, without touching the teeth with the teeth, with the body duly raised [straight]" — having joined the disciple to himself, he recalls the suṣumṇā channel united with the prāṇa, and the disciple's consciousness as pure crystal (23.210–212). The verse version of the same karaṇa as in the Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati vol. 3 and the Siddhāntasārapaddhati.

184. The Siddhāntasārapaddhati of Bhojadeva — the same manuscript as Kaphle's (NGMCP (Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing Project) B 28/19). A prose retelling of the same passage

- Colophon (below): iti mahārājādhirājaśībhojadeva viracitāyaṃ siddhānta paddhatau sādhakābhiṣeka vidhiḥ samāptaḥ || 0 ||
- Context: The Siddhāntasārapaddhati of Bhojadeva (a prose paddhati), the nirvāṇa-dīkṣā rite. The guru moves through the kalās and the tattvas, then: "having done the in-breath and the hold, fixing the tongue to the palate, slightly opening the mouth, without touching the teeth with the teeth, with the body straight" he joins himself with the disciple's ātman, unites the prāṇas in the suṣumṇā, contemplates the disciple's consciousness as pure crystal and utters the mantra. This is the karaṇa of the Svacchandatantra 4.365–367 inside an initiation.

Appendix A. Which sources are needed for the posture catalogue to rely only on exact quotations

Each description says in brackets where its bibliographic data come from. Where I have not checked them, this is stated outright.

Statuses in the catalogue (Part IV): * ⚠ — the information comes only from secondary literature.

The goal is to raise everything marked (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work), (translation only) and ⚠ to (verified against the primary source).

A. What only you can send me

These texts are not openly accessible. I have searched archive.org, GRETIL, and the Leiden and Hamburg repositories; Muktabodha does not let me in.

Nayasūtra 4.109–118	Prāṇāyāma, supraśānta, udghāta from one to five	Around pp. 489–493 (Bang refers to Goodall 2015: 489 f., 491–493)
Introduction: the section on the yoga of the Nayasūtra	The general interpretation	—

- What this will give: the earliest list of postures (now (Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work) and (translation only)) and the "letters with the body" (now (translation only)) will become (verified against the primary source). It will be possible to check the disputed readings: sāpāśraya or sāyāśraya, bhadracandraka in 4.105, the corruption of 4.106.

Clarification (17 Oct 2026). The full text of the dissertation has been sent as a single file: Nirajan Kafle, The Niśvāsamukha, the Introductory Book of the Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā: Critical Edition, with an Introduction and Annotated Translation appended by Śivadharmasaṅgraha 5–9 (PhD, Leiden 2015; hdl.handle.net/1887/35808), 403 pp. It is a duplicate: the same dissertation was downloaded from the Leiden repository long ago in three parts (the introduction; the critical text; the translation with the appended Śivadharmasaṅgraha 5–9 — the folder `texts_extra/kafle2015/`) and has been completely worked through — see Part IV, § 11 of the compendium: the list of the eight postures Niśvāsamukha 4.49cd–51 and the "karaṇa" 4.51 are checked against the edition ((verified against the primary source)); the Sanskrit of Nayasūtra 4.14c–15b and 4.105 is confirmed by independent quotations in scholarly editions ((Sanskrit — only via a quotation in scholarly work)). Gap A1 remains open: what is needed is precisely the volume Goodall et al. 2015 (Collection Indologie 128) — with the critical text, apparatus and translation of the Nayasūtra: 1.29–45 (letters with the body), 4.11–18 (the eight postures and their adoption), 4.101–118 (the second list, prāṇāyāma, suprasānta, udghāta). Kafle's dissertation does not edit these sections (it is about a different book of the Niśvāsa — the Mukha).

A2. Jayadrathayāmala, ṣaṭka 4 — ✅ CLOSED 17 Oct 2026

The Muktabodha e-text M00681 = ṣaṭka 4 has been obtained, typed from precisely the manuscript that was needed (NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 1-1468, NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms) B 122/4, AD 1626/7; rev. 0 of 9 April 2026). The stanzas of the phetkārī-mudrā ("4.2.612–622" per Roots of Yoga = 11 stanzas of the section "phetkārīmudrā vidhiḥ", file Jayadrathayāmala Ṣaṭka 4: Muktabodha e-text no. M00681, typed from the manuscript: NAK 1.1468, NGMPP b122/4; paper; Newari script; 237 folios; scribed in A.D. 1626/7; line numbers in that file: 2283–2310) and three further posture passages of the ṣaṭka are translated; the block "Stanzas with a translation" is in Part IV, § 10.3. The section below is kept for the record.

- Manuscript: National Archives, Kathmandu, MS no. 1-1468; Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, reel B 122/4 (per the bibliography of Roots of Yoga). Other researchers cite the same shelfmark.
- What is needed: the folios with 4.2.612–622 (phetkārīmudrā: a seated posture, the left foot at the anus, the right leg extended). Ideally — the whole of ṣaṭka 4 or any e-transcription of the Jayadrathayāmala, so that postures can be searched through the whole text.
- What this will give: the Sanskrit of a posture now known only from translation ((translation only)).

A3. Tantrasadbhāva — the full text

Clarification (17 Oct 2026). The full volume Bang 2018 has been sent in 19 parts (547 pp. in all): it is, byte for byte, the same work that was already in the corpus (`texts_extra/tantrasadbhava/`). The edited chapters are only 1, 3, 9, 18, 28 (+ appendices), so it does not close ch. 16 and 27. Of the new data: by the manuscript colophons (there pp. 44–45) ch. 16 = “yoginīlakṣaṇādhikāra” (the йогинӣ 24 пӣṭх — the subject of Siddhayogeśvarīmata 22), ch. 27 = the Raktākṛṣṭi section (udghāta). * E-text: Tantrasadbhāva, a “partially and provisionally edited” e-text, under Mark S. G. Dyczkowski, Muktabodha Indological Research Institute (Digital Library). The basis — the manuscripts NGMPP (Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project, microfilms) reels A 188/22, A 44/1, A 44/2. Also mentioned are NAK (National Archives of Nepal, Kathmandu) 5-1985 and 5-445. (Sources: Cracow Indological Studies 16, 2014; Törzsök, Women in Early Śākta Tantras, 2014.) * What I already have: Junglan Bang, Selected Chapters from the Tantrasadbhāva…, PhD Hamburg 2018 (ch. 1, 3, 9, 18, 28). There are no postures in these chapters. * What is needed: the whole e-text: I will search through it myself. At present ch. 16 and 27 are open: they are pointed out by secondary literature, but I do not have their Sanskrit.

A4. Vasudeva 2004 — the apparatus and notes to the Mālinīvijayottara

- Edition: Somadeva Vasudeva (ed. and trans.), The Yoga of the Mālinīvijayottaratantra: Chapters 1–4, 7, 11–17. Critical Edition, Translation and Notes. Collection Indologie 97. Pondicherry: Institut français de Pondichéry / École française d’Extrême-Orient, 2004. (Source: the bibliography of Roots of Yoga, the EFEO (École française d’Extrême-Orient) website.)
- What already exists: the text without the apparatus (GRETIL).
- What is needed:
    - pp. 367–419 — the sections on the limbs of yoga; udghāta — pp. 402–416 (per Roots of Yoga and Bang);
    - the apparatus and notes to Mālinīvijayottaratantra 7.15–17, 12.7 (jitāsana), 16.48, 17.10–12 (padmakādyāsana, jānuveṣṭana), 17.40–41;
    - the index for āsana, karaṇa, udghāta.

A5. Sarvajñānottara, Yogapāda — the printed edition

- Edition: Sarvajñānottara Yogapāda, ed. K. Ramachandra Sarma, revised by R. Thangaswami Sarma. Adyar Library Bulletin 62 (1998, published 1999), pp. 181–231 (per the bibliography of Roots of Yoga).
- What is needed: the whole publication, 51 pages. Especially:
    - v. 9 — the list of postures; in my e-text M00327 it is corrupt: pīṭhārdhatardhacandraṃ… karmato? bhadrameva;
    - vv. 250–251 — the karaṇa per Kaphle’s numbering. I was unable to identify this passage.

A6. Kiraṇa — a third source for the corrupt lines of ch. 58

- What exists: two manuscript transcripts of the IFP (the French Institute of Pondicherry), T0998 and T0746. The lines on ardhacandra and prasārita are corrupt in both.
- What is needed: any third source for ch. 58 (yogābhyāsavidhi):
    - the printed edition of the complete Kiraṇa. That is the Devakottai 1932 edition; I have not checked its data, and the PDF will not download from archive.org (error 500);
    - or another IFP or GOML (Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras/Chennai) transcript.
- Correction to my previous answer: M. P. Vivanti, Il «Kiraṇāgama». Testo e traduzione del «Vidyāpāda» (Napoli: Istituto Universitario Orientale, 1975; Supplemento n. 3 agli Annali, vol. 35, fasc. 2) — this is only the Vidyāpāda. For the postures it is not needed.

A7. Desirable, but not obligatory

- The Svacchanda in the Nepalese recension (Svacchandalalitabhairava), ch. 7, stanzas 290–291 — the list of postures. Needed to compare the list with the Kashmiri vulgate KSTS (the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies, Srinagar). I do not know the manuscript shelfmarks for certain.
- Dharmaputrikā, ed. Anil Kumar Acharya and Nirajan Kafle. Roots of Yoga (2017) calls it “forthcoming”. If the edition has appeared, it is better than my source (Barois 2017, ch. 2).
- Siddhayogeśvarīmata, the chapters not included in Törzsök 1999 (manuscripts D and N by her sigla). Only selected chapters are edited.
- Gandharvatantra, the printed edition of Kak and Harabhatta Shastri (a scan). Needed to check who owns the note in square brackets at 6.57 on the measure mātrā: the editors or the commentator.
- Tirumantiram (Tamil): only if you want to go beyond the Sanskrit corpus. An edition with a translation is needed.

C. What I already have and do not additionally need

- E-texts (Muktabodha, GRETIL — 177 files): the Svacchandatantra with Kṣemarāja's commentary, Mālinīvijayottaratantra, Kālottara, Bṛhatkālottara, Acintyaviśva, Suprabheda, Makuṭa, Kāmika and Uttarakāmika, Mṛgendra with the vṛtti, Śāradātilaka with Rāghavabhaṭṭa, Gandharva, Rudrayāmala, Kaulāvalī, Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati, Siddhāntasārapaddhati and others.
- Editions and transcripts: Kafle 2015 (Niśvāsamukha), Bhatt 1982 (Mataṅga, scans), the IFP (French Institute of Pondicherry) transcripts of the Kiraṇa, Bang 2018 (Tantrasadbhāva), Törzsök 1999 (Siddhayogeśvarīmata), Barois 2017 (Dharmaputrikā), Roots of Yoga (full text).

Appendix B. The e-texts referenced by the compendium

Here are listed all the e-texts of the primary sources to which the compendium refers with line numbers. How to read such references is explained in the introduction (§ 6). Briefly:

- "Muktabodha e-text no. M00318 …; line numbers in that file: 11025–11036" — M00318 is the catalogue number of the e-text in the digital library of the Muktabodha Indological Research Institute (this is a library number, not a manuscript number); 11025–11036 are the line numbers of that file, counted from the first line, including the service header. The file opens via the link from the table below (an ordinary text file in scholarly Latin transliteration); the needed passage is easy to find in any editor with line numbering or by searching (Ctrl+F) for the words of the quotation. The number of the manuscript or of the edition from which the file was typed is given in the third column.

- “GRETIL e-text, file sa_svacchandatantra.txt; line number in that file: 411” — a file of the GRETIL library (Göttingen Register of Electronic Texts in Indian Languages, Göttingen University), the text version; line 411 of that file.
- The numbers “E000xx” are also Muktabodha catalogue numbers (another series of the same catalogue).

In the column “Basis of the e-text” the data from the file’s own header are given literally (in English or in transliteration, as in the original): from which manuscript or from which edition it was typed. Abbreviations in these data: NGMCP / NGMPP — the Nepal-German Manuscript Cataloguing / Preservation Project (the manuscript number in the National Archives of Nepal and the microfilm number, Reel No.); IFP — the French Institute of Pondicherry (T… — the transcript number, RE — the manuscript number of its collection); KSTS — the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies. “Pre-1900” in the header means that the edition appeared before 1900, and the exact year is not given in the header. If the header has neither a manuscript nor an edition, the beginning of the description from the header is given. A dash in the column “No. in the list of texts” means that the text is not in the list of 64 texts of Part I and is mentioned in the compendium only in passing.

All files used in the work are checked byte for byte against the files at these addresses (October 2026). The Muktabodha texts are distributed under the Creative Commons BY-NC 4.0 licence.

Appendix C. Abbreviations and conventional signs retained in the quotations

In the compendium's own text the abbreviations are expanded. But inside verbatim quotations from scholarly works (English, French, German) and from the headers of e-texts the abbreviations are left as they stand in the original: a quotation must not be altered. They are explained here. The expansions of the Goudriaan & Gupta 1981 abbreviations are taken from that book's own list of abbreviations and bibliography; the expansions of the manuscript sigla — from the editions Kafle 2015 and Törzsök 1999 (the pages are given in Part IV, § 11 and § 14).

C.1. How to read the references to text passages

Entry	What it means
Muktabodha e-text no. M00318…; line numbers in that file: 11025–11036 (short: «Muktabodha M00318, file lines 11025–11036»)	M00318 is the catalogue number of the e-text in the digital library of the Muktabodha Indological Research Institute (not a manuscript number); 11025–11036 are the line numbers in that file, counted from the first line. The link leads to the file itself; in detail — the introduction, § 6.1; the list of all files — Appendix B

Entry	What it means
E00012	Also a Muktabodha catalogue number (the E series)
GRETIL e-text, file sa_svacchandatantra.txt; line number in that file: 411	A file of the GRETIL library (Göttingen University), line 411 of that file
7.290ab–291ab, 4.14c–15d	Chapter 7, stanza 290 etc. The letters a, b, c, d are the quarters (pāda) of the stanza: ab — the first half, cd — the second
1/60, 2/31 (in Sanskrit quotations)	The numbering inside the e-text itself (apparently, chapter/stanza)
fols. 27v–35v, fol. 13v, fol. 126b	Folios of the manuscript: r (recto) — the front side of the folio, v (verso) — the back; a/b mean the same in Indian catalogues
T0746, T0998, T00522	Numbers of paper transcripts (manuscript copies) in the collection of the French Institute of Pondicherry
RE 10779, RE 20294	The manuscript number in the collection of the French Institute of Pondicherry
NGMPP A 41/14, Reel No. B 120/6	The microfilm number of the Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project
NAK 1-277, Ms. No. 1-1675	The manuscript number in the National Archives of Nepal (Kathmandu)
p. 41) (inside the Sanskrit text)	The page number of the printed edition from which the e-text was typed; a typist's mark, not the text of the tantra
[k: …], [… ka pāṭhaḥ], [… kha pāṭhaḥ] (inside the Sanskrit text)	Variant readings noted by the editor; pāṭha — "reading", ka, kha — the manuscript sigla customary in Indian editions
▸ (Part V)	The line to which the catalogue refers (the quotation itself); the other lines are the surrounding context. The number on the left is the line number in the file

⚠ (Part IV)	The information is taken only from scholarly literature; the primary source is not checked
[sic]	“Thus in the source”: a misprint or an odd reading is reproduced deliberately
(?)	The reading or the translation is uncertain
…	An omission in the quotation
[ ] inside the translation	Words added by the translator for clarity

C.2. The signs of the critical apparatus (manuscript variant readings)

Sign	Meaning
]	On the left — the reading adopted by the editor; on the right — where it comes from and what variants exist
N, W, K (Niśvāsa, Kafle 2015)	Manuscripts: N — the palm-leaf of the National Archives of Nepal (NAK 1-277, microfilm NGMPP A 41/14), Licchavi script, per Kafle AD 850–900; W — the copy in the Wellcome Institute, London (Sanskrit MS I.33), 1912; K — the copy NAK 5-2406 (NGMPP A 159/18), 1925
D, N (Siddhayogeśvarīmata, Törzsök 1999)	Manuscripts: D — NAK 5-2403 (NGMPP A 203/6), paper, Devanāgarī; N — the Asiatic Society, Calcutta, no. 5465 (G), paper, Newari script, NS 793 (per Törzsök, ca. AD 1663)
DN, NW, NKW	So read all the manuscripts listed
em. (emendation)	The editor’s correction found in no manuscript
conj. (conjecture)	The editor’s conjectural restoration

Sign	Meaning
corr. (corrected)	Corrected by the editor
om. (omitted)	Omitted in the manuscript
suppl. (supplied)	Supplied by the editor
[ ] in the apparatus	A lacuna (loss of text) in the manuscript
°	The rest of the word is omitted
—	Letters of the manuscript lost or illegible
S., I., V. (in Törzsök)	The correction or conjecture is proposed (by): S. — A. Sanderson, I. — H. Isaacson, V. — S. Vasudeva (Törzsök 1999, p. lxxxiii)
