Yoga Kaustubha: The Eighty-Four Āsanas

About the text

Yoga Kaustubha is a printed yoga manual in Gujarati. Its title page names Nathurāma Pītāṃbarajī Rāvaḷa and Vaijanātha Motīrāmajī Bhaṭṭa as its compilers.

The section on āsanas contains eighty-four numbered descriptions, together with certain variants and statements about benefits traditionally attributed to the postures. This article is based on the printed book, pages 55–73, corresponding to pages 56–74 of the accompanying PDF.

The title page gives Śaka 1811 and Saṃvat 1946. Without further calendar clarification, these dates are not equated here with a single Gregorian year. Textual notes identify uncertain readings and corrections.

The source’s statements about health and other effects are presented as historical claims, not as evidence of medical efficacy.

Opening of the section on āsanas

The source defines āsana as that through which steadiness and ease are attained; it credits Ādinātha (Śiva) with 8,400,000 kinds of posture and presents eighty-four. It says that mastery of posture makes restraint of the mind and vital breath easier.

English translation: Bend the left arm at the elbow, place the elbow on the ground, press the palm to the cheek and sit leaning with the body’s weight on it. Place the right leg over the left, bend the legs at [the ankle?], and place the right hand on them. This is called Vāma Bhujāsana.

Textual note: The reading [ઘૂંટીમાં?] is tentative: the ending “-માં” is visible, but the exact word remains uncertain. A modern dictionary associates ઘૂંટી with the ankle; this does not establish the reading of the scan or say that the ankles are crossed.

Āsana 59 — Dakṣiṇa bhujāsana

Gujarati: જમણા હાથને કોણીથી વાળીને હાથનો પંજો ગાલે અડાડીને સદરહુ [કોણી?] ભોંયે અડાડી તે ઉપર દેહનો ભાર દઈ બેસવું અને જમણા પગ પર ડાબો પગ રાખી [ઘૂંટીમાં?] વાળવાં ને તે પર ડાબો હાથ રાખવો તે દક્ષિણ ભુજાસન કહેવાય છે.

The bracketed reconstruction is uncertain.

English translation: Bend the right arm at the elbow and place the palm against the cheek; place the aforementioned [elbow?] on the ground and sit with the body’s weight on it. Place the left leg over the right, bend the legs at [the ankle?], and place the left hand on them. This is called Dakṣiṇa Bhujāsana.

Textual note: The print after “aforementioned” is damaged; [elbow?] is a contextual reconstruction. The reading [ઘૂંટીમાં?] is also tentative. A modern dictionary associates ઘૂંટી with the ankle, but does not establish the precise reading of this copy.

Printed parallel: In Śrī Yoga Kaustubha (1949), pp. 176–177, a comparable description reads “તે કોણી” — “that elbow”. This supports the reconstruction but does not make the damaged place in the primary scan directly legible. Internet Archive

Conclusion

The Yoga Kaustubha section describes seated, standing, reclining and inverted positions, as well as variants of some of them. The printed descriptions should be read in their own context rather than automatically identified with modern postures bearing the same names. Statements about effects reflect the source’s own views and must be distinguished from modern medical assessments.
